FRESH BREACHES IN DNIEPER LINES

Motor Road Cut Near Kiev

THE Red Army had broken through again in three sectors, according to a Vichy broadcast last night. Quoting the Military Correspondent of the German News Agency, the commentator stated:—"Soviet troops have broken through the German lines in the Krivoi Rog sector, another break-through has occurred east of Kherson and the third in the vicinity of Kiev."

The Soviet communiqué states that the Kiev-Zhitomir motor road has been cut.

Among the places captured north of Kiev is Priorka, four miles north of the city. Capture of Svetoshino, five miles west of Kiev, means that the Kiev-Lubhn rail line has been cut.

Jean Paquis, Paris Radio Military Commentator, said last night: "Berlin military quarters regard the situation in the Crimea as very serious. Powerful Soviet reinforcements have arrived in the Kerch region, and pressure has increased near Perekop.

"Though the situation in the Crimea is considered to be grave, Berlin quarters say there are several German and Rumanian Armies on the peninsula, and an evacuation is out of the question at the present moment."

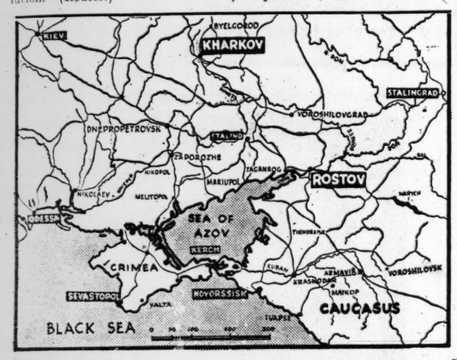

Exactly one year ago German forces were in Stalingrad. To-day they have been driven back 600 miles to the West. Red Armies to-day, with four "victory" months behind them, are fighting their way towards new successes on a 700-mile front. Reuter's Special Correspondent cables from Moscow.

Vital battles are going on in five key sectors. These are White Russia, West and South-West of Nevel, where the Soviets are driving towards the former Polish border, now less than 60 miles away; Kiev, where General Rokossovsky's men are battering their way nearer the heart of the Ukraine capital from the North; inside the Dnieper Bend, where the German forces are still struggling to hold back the Russian spearheads threatening them with encirclement and annihilation; on the Lower Dnieper, where Kherson is now within easy range of Russian heavy guns, and in the Crimea, where the position of the German Army is hourly growing worse.

The great Black Sea port of Nikolaev, at the mouth of the River Bug, as well as Kherson, is now threatened with complete blockade from the sea as Soviet troops drive west along the narrow neck of land between the sea channel leading up to these ports and the Karkinit Gulf.

Inside the Dnieper bend furious fighting continues uninterruptedly, as Russian troops press the Germans on the Krivoi Rog front and south of Dnepropetrovsk. With every day, almost every hour, the position of the German forces still inside the salient Krivoi Rog—Zaporozhe—Nikopol is becoming more precarious; there is only a single railway to the west available for them.

If the Russians succeed in crossing the Dnieper anywhere between Nikopol and Kherson, the salient will become another closed sack like that in the Crimea.

DEEP BRIDGEHEAD

The Soviet bridgehead on the west bank of the Dnieper above Kiev now extends for some 110 miles from a point about twelve miles north of Kiev. Its average depth is sixteen miles.

According to Colonel Von Hammer, Military Correspondent of the German News Agency, "North of Kiev the Soviets tried to achieve a break-through coming from the north. Some enemy tanks succeeded in penetrating into the rear of the German positions, but their pursuit has been taken up. The battle north of Kiev, which hourly increases in violence, is still in full swing."

KERCH BATTLES

Russian forces have broken into Kerch, in the Eastern Crimea, but have been thrown back again, according to Colonel Ernst Von Hammer, Military Correspondent of the German News Agency, says Reuter.

"Yesterday," he said, "the Soviets in the land approaches to the Crimea, threw strong forces, supported by tanks, into battle. During the night they also attempted to reinforce their beachheads in the Kerch area. North of Kerch an extremely violent battle is in progress. South of Kerch the Soviets were repulsed, suffering serious casualties. German forces, in daring counter-thrusts, reconquered the city, which temporarily had been in Soviet hands.

"South of Dnepropetrovsk," he added, "the Russians also employed tank formations and succeeded at two points in breaking into the German lines. They were, however, repulsed in immediate counter-thrusts."

Captain Sertorius declared that "German and Rumanian formations prevented repeated Soviet break-through attempts by defence and counter-attack at the northern end of the Perekop Isthmus."

A German column was encircled by Russian forces south-west of Velikie Luki (in the Nevel sector) two days ago, the German News Agency stated last night, and added: "Yesterday this column repelled more than 14 attacks, and during last night fought its way through to the German lines."

The Soviet communiqué stated: "In the area of Kiev, our troops continued to overcome enemy resistance and stubborn counter-attacks, and fought for the extension of their bridgehead on the right bank of the Dnieper. In the course of hard fighting, our troops captured a number of strongly-fortified enemy resistance centres. The motor road, Kiev-Zhitomir has been cut."

It was also stated that advances were made in the Black Sea coast area, south-west of Dnepropetrovsk, and west and south-west of Nevel.

ANXIOUS TO SEE STALIN

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT said yesterday at Washington that the great success of the Moscow Conference will undoubtedly lead to other meetings. He said he was anxious to get to know Stalin personally, adding that personal contact is always a good thing.

Mr. Roosevelt replied in the negative when asked if the Conference meant any change in the position of General George Marshall, the United States Army Chief.

The President was asked, in a lengthy statement submitted by the New York Times, to comment on some observations that the Moscow Conference results by-passed the Senate's right of treaty ratification.

The President read the question aloud, and laughingly replied: "The Constitution still lives."

The President approved the inclusion of Article Four of the Moscow Conference in the Senate compromise on the Connally resolution.—(Reuter.)

Lorry Owners to See Dail Deputies

"The next few weeks will decide the fate of the private lorry owners for all time, and we call on all traders to give us all the assistance they can in putting the case before the Dail, because we feel the Dail is our last resort," said Mr. M. J. O'Connor, general secretary, Merchant Lorry Owners' Association, at a special meeting yesterday of the Cork branch of the Association, which appointed a deputation to place the case for the private lorry owners before every Dail deputy in Cork City and County.

Mr. O'Connor said the Association desired this matter to be kept above politics. The lorry owners wanted their case put before every deputy regardless of party affiliations. The chairman, Mr. J. O'Shea, said all of them were property owners who wanted to protect their property. They were also businessmen, and objected to anybody trying to show them how to run their businesses.

Moscow Talks Do Not Bind French

THE French National Committee has declared in a communiqué, following a special 90-minute meeting yesterday, that decisions taken at the Moscow Conference do not necessarily bind France, says Reuter's Special Correspondent at Algiers.

"In the Committee's view," the communiqué says: "This Conference represents a new and important step along the road leading to the final defeat of the Axis Powers. The Conference, in fact, foreshadows for the Powers which participated a closer co-operation for the pursuit of the war and for the eventual organisation of peace. The Committee attaches too high a price to inter-Allied security not to be pleased with such a result.

"The Committee must, therefore, make it known that decisions which could have been taken on this subject would only bind France if she participated in them under conditions conforming with her interests and those of all her Allies, and corresponding to the sacrifices which she has herself made in the common cause.

"The Committee has decided to invite the Consultative Assembly to open a debate on the general international situation at one of its next sessions."

The principles upon which this declaration is based have already been communicated to Britain, America and Russia, and the statement bears the unanimous backing of the Committee, Reuter's Correspondent states.

"Violent" Air Battles Over Germany

FLYING FORTRESSES and Liberators of the U.S.A. 8th Army Air Force, escorted by Thunderbolts and Lightnings, attacked targets in Western Germany, while Marauders, escorted by Spitfires, attacked targets in Northern France, yesterday. R.A.F. bombers, with fighter escort, were over Northern France during further air activity late in the afternoon.

The German News Agency stated last night that "violent air battles were fought over North-Western German territory. Many German fighters went up and engaged the raiders in heavy air duels. The exact number of 'planes shot down has not yet been ascertained."

A British Air Ministry communiqué states that on Thursday night Mosquitoes of Bomber Command attacked objectives in Western Germany. Four aircraft are missing.

The British Air Ministry News Service stated that hits were scored on four German E-boats attacked off the Dutch coast yesterday by Beaufighters of Coastal Command.

It was announced by the British Air Ministry and American Headquarters that United States Eighth Army Air Force heavy bombers attacked industrial targets at Gelsenkirchen and the railway yards at Munster. Thirty-eight German fighters were destroyed and 17 Allied 'planes are missing.

'Plane Crash in Irish Sea

An aeroplane crashed into the sea in the vicinity of Ardglass, Co. Down, shortly before mid-day yesterday. Newcastle lifeboat was called out, and picked up the dead body of the pilot.

£150 Damages in T.D.'s Action for Libel

THE hearing concluded yesterday, before Judge McEnery at Letterkenny, of the action for libel brought by Mr. Neal Blaney, T.D., against the Champion Publications, Ltd., and Marcus Harkin, Muff, Culdaff.

The Judge awarded the plaintiff £150 damages, with costs and expenses. He was sorry, he said, for Harkin, but the law compelled him to make one judgment and one decree against both defendants.

In the course of his judgment, Judge McEnery said that he could not subscribe to the view of several witnesses, that defaming a public man did not really matter; that it should run off him like water off a duck; that he was to be slandered and libelled at will, and that, whether he suffered damage or not, he should regard himself as fair game for every person or newspaper that sought to defame him. He (the Judge) could not subscribe to that view.

The plaintiff headed the poll and exceeded the quota in the June election. It was obvious that his constituents regarded him as fit, proper, competent and faithful to represent them in the nation's Parliament.

THE LETTER

Following the Donegal Committee of Agriculture meeting, his lordship said, Harkin penned what appeared to his lordship on examination to be a clever, intelligent, logical, deliberate production, which the People's Press published fully. The letter was bulging with facts, or alleged facts, with just a little streak of comment of a very deadly character. Even if the facts were true, the comment exceeded the bounds of fair criticism, and there must be a verdict for Blayney.

"I find," said his lordship, "that on February 27th this year, when Blayney wrote to the newspaper stating his complaints with which he has now come into court, the newspaper said: 'Come along, we will be court; we will give you space; we don't like any public man to be defamed,' and at a suitable time the editor would be the judge in the case and say, 'This correspondence is now closed.' And that is the way that Blayney's character is to be vindicated. It seems to me ludicrous that it comes before me as a good defence, that the newspaper said: 'Won't you come into my parlour.' For a period of nine or ten months they persisted in that attitude and persisted right up to this moment."

Judge McEnery added that he felt he should accede to counsel's proposition and mark his disapproval of the attitude adopted by the defendant company by awarding substantial damages.

Naval Clash

An engagement off Great Yarmouth early yesterday between German E-boats and a British convoy was reported by the German News Agency. The Agency said that the E-boats broke through the destroyer escort, and, in a surprise attack, torpedoed two ships of 2,500 tons each. A 4,000 tons ship was also sunk.—(Reuter.)

CHUNGKING AGREEMENT ANNOUNCED

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT announced yesterday in Washington that British, American and Chinese military leaders reached complete agreement at the meeting in Chungking upon the method of handling the Continental campaign in the Far East.

It means "bad news" for the Japanese, he stated.

Those taking part in the Conference included Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek, Generals Stillwell, Chennault and Somervell, and Lord Louis Mountbatten.

Roosevelt said that an operational plan for joint action by Chinese, British and Americans had been drawn up as a result of these most successful talks. He added that the presence of General Somervell indicated the importance of the question of supplies, but emphasised that the Conference also included strategy.

Lieut.-General Brehon Somervell, chief of the United States Services of Supply, has already returned from Chungking. He conferred with the President yesterday, Reuter states.

Describing the recent victory by American naval forces in the South-West Pacific as an "extremely successful operation," the President said that the Bougainville landing was in a sense the "stepping-stone" method, which he is generally against.

The Japanese, he added, have a very strong point in Rabaul.

Bombers to Open Road to Berlin

—Sir A. Sinclair

SPEAKING at Cheltenham last night, Sir Archibald Sinclair, British Air Minister, said:—"We shall continue to hammer the enemy from the skies till we have paralysed their war industries, disrupted their transport system, and broken their will to war. Then, at last, the road will lie open to Berlin." Royal Air Force Bomber Command, he said, twelve times as strong as at the outbreak of war and dropping a twenty times greater bomb load, had, in three years, been "learning to pack its punches."

"During October, of the enemy aircraft operating over this country at night, more than six per cent. were shot down, he said. That figure was substantially more than the rate of loss suffered by the Allies' own heavy bombers in their devastating attacks on Germany. Contrast it, too, with the harassing attacks by our own Mosquitos in October, when they lost under two per cent., as against the German loss of over six per cent. My hopes rest mainly on Bomber Command. The average bomb load which these aircraft can carry is three times as great as that of their progenitors in 1939. The striking power of Bomber Command is at least twelve times as strong as at the outbreak of war.

"DEADLY BLOWS"

"During the three years the tonnage of bombs dropped increased by more than twenty times over what we were dropping in those months of 1940. You will see, therefore that during these years there has been no complacency in the Royal Air Force, but that we have been learning to pack our punches. Five per cent. of Coventry was destroyed in the German attacks of 1940. Forty per cent. of Essen has been virtually destroyed, 54 per cent. of Cologne and 74 per cent. of Hamburg.

"Those battles which our bomber crews are winning are shortening the war and reducing the toll of casualties which the Allied armies will have to pay for victory. Their casualties in Bomber Command are not light but I ask you where else in the world, and with what other weapons, could fewer than ten thousand men strike such deadly blows at the enemy?"

"War," he said in conclusion "has given a sharp impulse to scientific research and development, especially on air problems. We must see to it after the war that scientific research is organised on a broader basis and receives more powerful support than ever before."

"Now We Are A Trinity," says Smuts

THE Moscow Conference may be looked upon as the greatest diplomatic victory of this war, General Smuts stated yesterday in London. He was speaking to a gathering of South African men and women serving in the armed forces of Britain.

"Now we are a trinity," he said. "Hitler based his hopes on the failure of Moscow as his best chance and as a way out of his difficulties, but instead of disagreement there is partnership.

"I look upon this development as one of the greatest events of the whole war.

"We worked out our main lines of policy, and the trinity is going to do the trick. Make no mistake about that. If we avoid major mistakes, I see nothing to prevent us from fighting this war to its clearest conclusion."

Eden in Cairo

Mr. Anthony Eden conferred yesterday in Cairo with M. Menemenjoglu, the Turkish Foreign Minister, Sir Hugh Knatchbull-Hugessen, the British Ambassador to Turkey, was present.

Circles in close touch with the Turkish Government express considerable surprise at suggestions that Mr. Eden might invite Turkey to enter the war, reports Reuter's correspondent. They state that such an invitation seems more than improbable.

Mr. Churchill Refuses to Prophesy

MR. CHURCHILL said, at a song concert at Harrow School last night, that no one would be so foolish as to try to fix some point at which the war would end. No one could tell at what moment the resistance of the enemy might break.

"A whole generation has passed through the school since I was here in the winter of 1940. It was then more exciting than it seemed. You had all been engaged putting out incendiary bombs. Now, I am afraid, this form of entertainment has for the moment collapsed. England, which then stood alone with her Dominions against mighty forces, is now taking her place, one of the leading places, with 32 United Nations, comprising the vast majority of the population of mankind, equipped with factories and arsenals and training schools of war, with every form of military endeavour and attribute.

"We, with this great company, are striding forward. We cannot doubt; we need not doubt, if we do our duty, victory will be our reward. We shall once again have brought the great British Commonwealth and Empire and all it stands for safely through one of the greatest convulsions which has ever shaken humanity, without the slightest loss of our possessions or the slightest diminution to our character and our honour. We have, indeed, not only saved ourselves, but by gaining breathing time we have enabled the great mass of nations to form up and be equipped to see their duty clearly, and to take their place with us in the struggle.

"A great responsibility will fall on our country with others, but primarily with us, because we shall have to bear the burden of shaping the future as far as it is in our power or in our duty to do."

Concert Itinerary for Co. Dublin

In an informal group around a pleasant turf fire in Cabinfeely Public Library last night sat a group of about fifty men and women from the Cabinteely-Foxrock area listening to gramophone records of music by Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Chopin, presented with an intimate commentary by Captain Michael Bowles, Musical Director of Radio Eireann.

This was the first of a series of rural concerts arranged by Mr. D. J. O'Donovan, County Commissioner for Dublin, in an effort to bring people in rural parishes together to form cultural centres. The concerts will take place fortnightly, and a similar series will begin in Dundrum on Friday next. It is hoped that in time these concerts may be extended to other districts, and the scope widened to include other interests.

Last night's concert could undoubtedly be called a success. About 20 or 30 well-dressed people arrived early, listened attentively, and appeared to take it all in. About 20 others listened with varying degrees of interest, and the bulk of the audience, which consisted of about 100 children from the neighbouring districts, remained reasonably quiet, but were plainly unimpressed.

Opinions were varied. Some seemed glad of the opportunity to hear such good music, coupled with such an informed commentary; some felt that Radio Eireann provided them with more than an adequate ration of recorded music; others liked the idea of listening in company.

Discussing the experiment with an Irish Times reporter, Captain Bowles said that he hoped these programmes would have the effect of stimulating interest in music, so that eventually an informed and intelligent listening public for professional music in Ireland might be formed.

Germans Prepare New Defences in Italy

EIGHTH ARMY ADVANCES EIGHT MILES

THE Fifth Army yesterday captured Vallecupa, four miles west of Venafro, last remaining bastion of the former German line, the evacuation of which by German troops was announced by the German News Agency last night.

The Eighth Army—which, according to Reuter, are using tanks on a greater scale than ever before in Italy—have captured San Salvo.

German troops are putting up new defences on the north bank of the Garigliano River, says Reuter's special correspondent at Allied H.Q., N. Africa. Strong machine-gun duels are being fought across the muddy waters with advanced units of the Fifth Army. To the north-east the Fifth Army, pushing five and a half miles up the mountain ridge between Venafro and the inland road to Rome, have captured Vallecupa, the seizure of which puts the Allied troops astride a secondary road running west from Venafro to join the inland road to Rome, and effectively cuts off the German garrison from its right flank. Under constant heavy fire from Allied artillery, the garrison's only hope is to escape northward over the mountains, using little-known mule tracks and pathways.

Fifth Army guns dominate the whole of the upper reaches of the Volturno River Valley. At some points troops are actually across the river here, and have secured some of the heights beyond. The fall of Carpinone, a valuable road junction, was a natural sequel to the capture of Isernia, five miles to the West.

On the Adriatic, after many days of bitter fighting, the Eighth Army has captured San Salvo, two miles across the Trigno River, and three miles from the sea. Sweeping on without pause after its capture, the Eighth Army yesterday advanced eight miles, and now control an important junction on the Vasto-Isernia road.

The capture of San Salvo, with its road and rail communications, is a direct threat to the next German coastal strongpoint of Vasto, four miles to the north.

Flying Fortresses of the new 15th United States Air Force joined with the 12th United States Air Force and the R.A.F. in a combined day-long assault on German western coastal communications in Italy on Thursday, says Reuter's Special Correspondent at Allied H.Q., North Africa. Targets included Orbetello, 85 miles north of Rome; Montalto di Castro, 65 miles north of the capital; Cecina and Vinconzo, 20 miles and 30 miles south of Leghorn respectively.

"GAINING TIME"

The Allied armies in Italy are magnificently equipped, a German commentator said last night. "The Anglo-Americans have used great quantities of material, and do not have great supply difficulties," he added. "German military sources express the hope that the battle in Southern Italy will continue in the same slow tempo as up till now."

Captain Sertorius, German overseas commentator, said last night: "The Allies are now striving to make their superiority in men and material felt. It is a great superiority, and the Allies do not care for losses. On the other hand, German tactics still aim at gaining time.

"Special care is taken to protect the coastal zone of the southern Italian defence area. The enemy has the freedom of the seas, and German strategy must, therefore, be prepared to prevent leap-frog landings, such as was carried out at Salerno. The enemy landing attempts the day before yesterday and yesterday in the areas of Istonio (Vasto) and Pescara had been expected for a long time by the German Command, and they were nipped in the bud.

"The township of Isernia, which has been reached by the British, has been their strategic goal since they took Vinchiaturo. Yet it took the British three weeks to advance the 18 miles from Vinchiaturo."—(Reuter.)

The German News Agency said last night: "The evacuation of Isernia and Venafro by German troops constitutes a non-exploitable gain, from the operational point of view, for the Anglo-Americans, due to a further blocking up of the transit roads."

Brazzaville Radio reported from the Italian front last night that the Eighth Army was fighting in the suburbs of Venafro. It also reported that the Fifth Army was now only five miles from Minturno, key of the German line above the Garagliano.

Cairo Radio reported that Carpinone, ten kilometres from Isernia, had been captured.

French Landing "Imminent"

—PAQUIS.

JEAN PAQUIS, Paris radio commentator, said last night: "It seems that an Allied landing in France will take place in the immediate future.

"The 'Paris-Soir' publishes a stop press message saying that large-scale ship movements had been observed off the southern coast of England.

"For the past few days ships of the British Navy have been concentrating in Channel ports; many merchant ships have also arrived in Southern England.

"We are on the eve, so it appears, of a new chapter in the history of the war, and zero hour may strike at any moment.

"The 'Paris-Soir' report is viewed without anxiety in Government quarters."—(Reuter.)

Future Baronet Sought in Ireland

THE Editor of "Debrett" is anxious to trace the whereabouts of any descendants of an Irish doctor named John Wolseley, who probably was born at Tullycorbet, in the Diocese of Clogher.

Dr. Wolseley was the fourth son of Captain Wolseley, third son of Sir Richard Wolseley, first Baronet, of Mount Wolseley, Co. Carlow. Sir Richard was created a Baronet of Ireland in 1745. The present holder of the title is the Rev. Sir William Wolseley, Vicar of Alnham, Northumberland, and it is not known who is his heir; but, if Dr. Wolseley has descendants living in the male line, the senior of these would inherit the baronetcy.

Dr. Wolseley's father was a captain in the 8th Hussars, and served with distinction in the Seven Years War of 1756-1763, in the great struggle between Frederick the Great of Prussia and Marie Thérèse of Austria. After retiring from the Army, Captain Wolseley took Holy Orders, and became Rector of Tullycorbet. He died in 1800, and it is presumed that it was at Tullycorbet that Dr. Wolseley was born. It is known that he married and had issue, but the names of the children have never been entered in "Debrett."

Anyone who can give any information on the subject is asked to communicate with the Editor of "Debrett," 30 Bedford street, Strand, London, W.C.2.

Rush Candles Light Rural Homes

Rush candles, somewhat odorous and smoky, are helping to light dwellings in Virghia, Co. Cavan, which would otherwise be in complete darkness. The candles are made by dipping rushes in dripping or a similar fat.

"They give a very bright light," said Mr. D. O'Carroll, who, with other members of the Geographical Society of Ireland, visited the locality in July last, and gave a talk on the different aspects of life there at a meeting of the Society held in the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin, last night. Other speakers included Mr. R. H. Brown, Mr. A. Farrington, Mr. T. Maguire, and Miss D. E. Murphy.

Alliance With Czechoslovakia

Russia and Czechoslovakia have completed negotiations for a twenty-year defensive military alliance against Germany, and Dr. Benes will go to Moscow to sign the treaty, says an A.P. message from Washington.

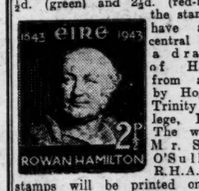

London Raid Casualties

During a raid in the London area last night, a three-storey building was wrecked and some people were buried. An A.A. shell which exploded on a main road killed a husband and wife, who were standing in the porchway of their house. One of the raiding aircraft was destroyed.

At Virginia, Co. Cavan, District Court, yesterday, Bernard Flood (35), Corrasliève, was returned for trial to the Central Criminal Court, charged with the murder of his stepfather, Owen Morgan (55), Corrasliève, on October 19th.

Stamp to Mark a Centenary

A SPECIAL commemorative stamp in honour of Sir William Rowan Hamilton, distinguished Irish mathematician, physicist and discoverer of quaternions, will be issued by the Department of Posts and Telegraphs this day week, the centenary of the announcement of his discovery to the Royal Irish Academy. In two denominations, ½d. (green) and 2½d. (red-brown), the stamp will have as its central feature a drawing of Hamilton from a bust by Hogan in Trinity College, Dublin. The work of Mr. Sean O'Sullivan, R.H.A., the stamps will be printed on Irish paper and will remain on sale until the end of June, 1944. The design combines the requirements of effective portraiture with that simplicity of treatment demanded for reproduction of postage stamp size. Light and shade are treated with an economy which does not detract from, but rather helps, the life-like effect achieved.

Sir William, who was born at 36 Dominick street, Dublin, in August, 1805, and died sixty years later, has been described by Professor Erwin Schroedinger as "one of the greatest men of science the world has produced," Professor Schroedinger adds: "We are proud to emphasise his Irish nationality, because, as an American mathematician puts it, 'One of the driving impulses behind Hamilton's incessant activity was his avowed desire to put his superb genius to such uses as would bring glory to his native land.'"

Monday's general meeting of the Royal Irish Academy will be devoted to the commemoration. Among a number of papers to be read will be one entitled "Quaternions and Matrices," by Dr. Arthur W. Conway, M.A., President, University College, Dublin.

Vocational Education To Cost More

The rates of local bodies for vocational education are to be increased by one penny in the £ as from April 1st next. The present rate in the county boroughs and the urban districts is 6d. in the £, and in other places 4d.

This increase is provided for in the Vocational Education (Amendment) Bill, the text of which was issued yesterday.

It is also provided that the rating authorities shall be obliged to raise a rate to enable compulsory continuation education to be provided, and, if the Minister for Education should be dissatisfied with the provision made in this regard, he is being given powers to cause the Councils of the four county boroughs and the Borough of Dun Laoghaire to raise a rate equal to 2d. in the £, and in other areas 1d. in the £, for the purposes of the scheme, these rates to be in addition to the annual local contribution for that year for this purpose.

The Minister also proposes to take powers to fix the age limits of all officers of committees. Officers may be removed for unfitness to hold office, or for refusing to obey any orders lawfully given, or for misconduct.

HER RHEUMATISM KEPT COMING BACK

Daughter Suffered with Same Complaint

Kruschen Made Them Both Well

Rheumatism often runs in families. In this case, mother and daughter were affected, and they both suffered very severely for weeks at a time. The son tells how his mother and sister were restored to health by Kruschen Salts:—

"Until about four years ago, my mother, who is 67 years of age, was subject to regular and periodic attacks of rheumatism which rendered her completely helpless for weeks at a time. Even when she was able to get about, she suffered pain and was never really free from it. Then she started on Kruschen Salts, taking it regularly every morning. As a result, her rheumatism gradually improved until it was gone completely, while her general health has improved beyond belief.

"Two years ago my sister had an attack of rheumatism and was bedridden with it for three weeks. With the approval of her doctor, Kruschen Salts was tried, and like my mother, my sister was completely cured. We are all very grateful."—W.R.

Kruschen Salts is a blend of natural mineral salts, each of which has a direct or indirect action in the treatment of rheumatic complaints. A single bottle of Kruschen will convince you that rheumatism simply cannot exist in the system that gets its "little daily dose."

Kruschen Salts is sold by all Chemists, price 1/9 per bottle.

Best Time for Tree Planting

By G. O. Sherrard.

NOVEMBER is a busy month for the gardener, as the fall of the leaf marks the beginning of the planting season for all kinds of deciduous trees and shrubs. Evergreens, too, can now be planted, and certain of these, which transplant badly, such as holly, the pines and Cupressus Macrocarpa move better early this month than later in the winter. Any arrears of bulb planting should be completed as quickly as possible, and the moving of all kinds of herbaceous plants can be undertaken now that they are fully dormant.

There are several reasons why it is an advantage to plant early in the winter. There is still some warmth in the soil, so that root action commences at once. It is found that roses flower better and fruit trees make more growth in their first season if they have been planted in November rather than later. The nurseries also are more likely to have the plants you want now than later on, when they may be sold out of them.

Pruning

As soon as the leaves are off the fruit trees and bush fruits, their pruning should be commenced. Pruning is cold work, and is liked to be colder later on; also it is advisable to have the fruit trees pruned in good time, so that advantage can be taken of favourable weather to carry out the winter spraying. The illustrated leaflets of the Department of Agriculture dealing with the subject of pruning, Nos. 38 and 39, will be found helpful, but, in addition, the beginner should call in the local county instructor in horticulture to give a demonstration.

Spraying

The winter spraying of fruit trees and bushes can be undertaken towards the end of the month. In order to be fully effective, this spraying must be done on a still day, and rain should not fall for 24 hours afterwards. Such conditions are rare in our winter climate, and the fruit grower must be in a position to take full advantage of them when they occur. The object of spraying fruit trees in winter is to kill the eggs of insects which have been laid on the bark and spurs and to cleanse the trees of moss and lichen. The spray used is a tar oil wash, which is most effective in dealing with the eggs of greenfly and apple sucker. With the aid of a hand lens these eggs can now be seen on the spurs of the apple. Those of the apple sucker are orange, and of the greenfly shining black like tiny bits of coal. Apples, pears, plums and all the bush fruit should get a dose of tar oil wash every winter—greenfly is even more troublesome on plums and bush fruit than on the apple. It must be emphasised that winter spraying with a tar oil wash does not give any control of apple scab or other fungus disease. Details about the strength to use, and the insects controlled by these sprays, are given in Leaflet No. 85 of the Department of Agriculture.

Vegetables

In the vegetable garden the planting out of hardy winter lettuce and of autumn-sown onions can still be carried out, but should be concluded as early as possible. Cauliflowers sown last month in boxes will shortly be ready for pricking out into frames, or, better still, into 4in. pots for wintering. Lettuce for planting in the greenhouse in January, or in the open in February, will also be ready for pricking off this month into boxes or frames. Rhubarb should have the crowns covered with strawy manure to protect it from frost. All vacant ground should be dug up and left rough to expose it to the pulverising effect of frost. Fallen leaves should be carefully collected on account of their high manurial value.

CLERGY DAUGHTERS' SCHOOL

"It is up to women to try and make the world a happier, better and a brighter place," said Miss Florence Adair, presenting the prizes yesterday at the annual prizegiving of the Clergy Daughters' School, Earlsfort terrace, Dublin. Women had great influence in the world, she said; they had the making of homes and the forming of children's character.

The Archbishop of Dublin, who presided, said that the Clergy Daughters' School belonged to the whole Church of Ireland, and that the girls themselves were the best advertisement for the school.

A successful year's work was recorded by the Headmistress, Miss Bradish, in her address. Considering the fact that of the 50 girls in the school over 40 were juniors under sixteen, the list of examination successes was one of which the school could be proud, she said. At the examination for Entrance Scholarships and Junior Exhibitions in Trinity College the Walter Wormser Harris Prize had been awarded to Joy Molyneux. All the 19 pupils who had entered for the Synod examination had passed.

The Rev. W. Good, of Bangor, Co. Down, also spoke.

On next Thursday there will be a special Service in the Cathedral at 10.45 a.m.

A Memorial Service will be held at 11.15 to-morrow, when the preacher will be Canon Tobias. The anthem, "Souls of the Righteous," will be sung by the choir, with Mr. J. Turner Huggard, F.R.C.O., at the organ. In the evening there will be a special musical Service, when Wood in D will be sung, and the anthem will be "How Lovely are the Messengers" (Mendelssohn).

BOOKS OF THE WEEK

Church and Education

What is Education? By the Very Rev. Dr. Edward Leen, C.S.Sp. Burns, Oates and Washbourne. 10/6 net.

THIS well-informed and closely-reasoned volume is primarily intended for Dr. Leen's co-religionists of the Roman Catholic Church. Should it fall into the hands of Christians of other denominations who may be in full sympathy with the author's general aims and objects they will nevertheless be amazed at his sweeping and often quite unjustified generalisations and at his peculiarly authoritarian philosophy.

Dr. Leen affords an example of the that his book is intended both for English and Irish consumption, and one of his chief complaints is that Great Britain, and possibly the United States, may in the post-war years adopt a single nation-wide system of education. One would sympathise more with his fears had his protest against the similar system in recent years in Ireland been more strenuous. The English educational system is a haven of freedom compared with the Irish. It is not examination-ridden to the same extent, and there is ample choice both as regards courses and as regards set books. Things are very different in Eire, where there is no alternative, for recognised pupils, to the State examination with its exceedingly limited curriculum.

Dr Leen is an example of the censorship mind par excellence. Not, of course, that censorship interferes with man's freedom! By no means! "A man's freedom is not curtailed when he is not allowed to take mental poison." He contends that in classical studies such mental poison is continuously being absorbed, and, with the Latin fathers Tertullian, Jerome and Augustine, he is opposed to the study of all pagan classics. Equally good Latin is written, he claims, by the Christian scholars of the Silver Age. He is himself prepared to be a second Isidore of Seville, and to prepare adequate summaries of the more innocuous parts of human knowledge in order that our weak-willed generation may be kept out of temptation.

In addition to a revision of the classical course, Dr. Leen would make a course in Philosophy compulsory for all secondary school pupils. Naturally, the philosophy concerned would not be of a speculative nature, and would have no place for that not unknown philosopher, Bishop Berkeley.

From the point of view of a democracy, this is a dangerous book. It is concerned, not with the rights of the individual, but rather with the power of an organised and limiting system, and though, at the moment, the cry of religious freedom can be raised as a defence for an English minority, the general principles on which this work is based allow for little or no deviations from an authoritative norm.—J. J. A.

Irish Folklore

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—Your reviewer of the "Journal of the Folklore of Ireland Society" (Irish Times, October 23rd) says:—"It is, of course, in English, as the proprietors of this journal are apparently believers in the principle of Irish for the natives. . . . The free use of English for exposition makes this journal an anti-revival publication, and its respect and use to that extent diminished."

This journal is in the category of learned publications, and, presumably, goes all over the world to all universities and libraries which cater for folklore and comparative literature. Its purpose is scholarly, not propagandist.

May I protest that scholarly publications should be reviewed as such?—Yours, etc.,

STUDENT.

Periodicals

The Quarterly Review. John Murray. 7/6 net.

The contents of the current number of The Quarterly Review, for the most part deal with subjects which are at present of world-wide interest, and are certain to be of prime concern for governments, economists and leaders of industry in post-war years. The two first contributions, "Is International Currency Wanted?" by Sir Ernest Benn, and "The Neglect of Shipping," by Mr. Cuthbert Maughan, discuss problems of vital moment which affect the industrial and commercial life of nations.

The Bell. November, 1943. Irish People's Publications. 1/6 net.

The Capuchin Annual's article, "Orange Terror," has occasioned a demurrer in this month's issue of The Bell, by "Ultach Eile." His thesis on the question of "persecution" of Catholics in the North is that "the scarcity of jobs is at the root of it all." "Medicus" writes on "Defectives in the Dock"—a thorough and informative article—and Mrs. Hanna Sheehy-Skeffington on "Women in Politics." B. McM.'s article on "The Plain People of England" has been mentioned in "An Irishman's Diary." A good issue of a magazine which must be read.

The Nineteenth Century. Constable. 3/- net.

Citizens of neutral as well as belligerent countries will find the opening article in last month's number of The Nineteenth Century, dealing with the war's development as affected by Italy's volte face The writer understands the present attitude of the Italian people, seeing them above all things eager for peace. In the essay, "What is the Use of Creeds?" readers will find a melancholy interest; for it is the last contribution from the pen of the late Bishop of Norwich, Dr. Bertram Pollock, who died a few days ago.

Chapters from an Autobiography

By Seumas O'Sullivan

FROM 1902 onwards I contributed fairly frequently both prose and verse to Griffith's United Irishman and to its successor, Sinn Féin. Shortly after my first meeting with AE he handed to me in the Vegetarian Restaurant a copy of the United Irishman, and expressed surprise when I told him that I had never read a copy of it. "It is the only Irish weekly worth buying," he said; and it did, at that time, include amongst its contributors not only AE himself, but also Yeats, John Eglinton, Padraic Colum, Joseph Campbell, Frank Fay (who dealt with theatrical things), and, a little later, James Stephens. And not one of its contributors asked for, not one of them would have accepted, a fee. For everything done at that time was the work of enthusiasts, work done in their spare moments by men who were busy all day in their various occupations; journalists, electricians accountants, clerks, varied, indeed, in their callings, but united in one effort to "bring a soul into Ireland." Great things were happening. AE and Horace Plunkett with the Agricultural Organisation Society; Griffith, with the young giant, Sinn Féin (still in its cradle, but already with more than one slain serpent to its credit), the Fay brothers with the beginnings of what should have been a national theatre. The air was, indeed, to use the worn out phrase, "electric." "It was the best of times; it was the worst of times."

Quite recently a man had been convicted by the English Government for having his name in Irish characters painted on his cart—he was, if I remember rightly, sentenced to imprisonment for the offence. But the reaction against the Government procedure had raised a storm of protest which did more for the language movement than all the "compulsory" methods have since achieved. Susan Mitchell's satirical ballad was only one of many which the incident invoked:—

"Who fears to write his Irish name upon his apple-cart?"

In the agricultural districts all over the country the "gombeen-men" were in control to an extent which has only been surpassed in recent years. But Horace Plunkett, AE, Robert Anderson and many others, statesmen, politicians, authors and economists had flocked to the banners of the I.A.O.S., and were doing splendid and unselfish work.

National Theatre

Our theatres were flooded with the third-rate overflow of the London stage, but the Fay Brothers were already getting into their stride. Arthur Griffith and his Sinn Fein movement, AE, and the agricultural regeneration of the country—these have been dealt with by abler hands than mine. The history of the Irish National Theatre has yet to be written. Many books have been written on the subject, it is true, but they have one and all made the initial and, to me, unforgivable, mistake of attributing the movement to one man only. Yeats had, it is true, in 1899, with his performance of "The Countess Cathleen" in the Antient Concert Rooms, directed our thoughts to the possibility of producing plays by Irish authors in Dublin; but his company consisted entirely of English men and English women.

That first performance of "The Countess Cathleen" was, nevertheless, a memorable occasion. "The event," writes Ernest Boyd, in his book, "The Contemporary Drama of Ireland," was marked by one of those demonstrations of æsthetic illiteracy which have from time to time conferred a certain notoriety upon works deserving of more serious fame. A politician, a cardinal, and a newspaper combined forces in order to stir up opposition to the play, on the ground that it was blasphemous and unpatriotic. The first charge was based upon the language of the demons, the second upon the theme itself. It was argued that no Irishwoman would sell her soul to the devil, and that the personages of the play, natural and supernatural, referred in too irreverent fashion to sacred subjects. . . . A number of Catholic students were induced to sign a protest, and the usual preparations for creating a disturbance in the theatre were made."

I was, by chance, in the gallery, and at the fall of the curtain a storm of hooting and hissing broke out around the seats in which I and a few enthusiasts were attempting to express our appreciation of the magnificent performance (I can never forget the exquisite playing and speaking of Florence Farr, who played the part of Aileel, the bard.) But close to me, and at the time unknown to me, was a lad who vigorously contributed his share to the applause. It was James Joyce, who was later on to face an even greater storm of disapproval when he published his "Ulysses." In the following year the Literary Theatre continued its good work with the production of George Moore's "Bending of the Bough," Martyn's "Maeve," and "The Last Feast of the Fianna," by Alice Milligan; and in 1901 I was present in the Gaiety Theatre when the Literary Theatre gave their final performance—"Diarmuid and Grania," by Yeats and Moore, and (in Irish) the "Cusadh an t-Sugain" of Douglas Hyde.

The Fays' Company

No praise can be too high for Yeats and those who were with him against every form of opposition and difficulty during those three years of pioneer work; but the real beginning of a National Theatre came in the year 1902, when, in a little hall in Clarendon street—it was, I believe, a "Temperance" institute—the brothers Fay produced "Cathleen Ni Houlihan," by Yeats, and AE's "Deirdre." Those who had the privilege of being present on that occasion will remember it as long as they live. I have never since seen an audience so moved as when Madam MacBride, who played the title rôle in Yeats's play, spoke the closing words as she turned away from the cottage door. I was with Arthur Griffith, and I can still see his face as he stood up at the fall of the final curtain to join in the singing of what was then our national anthem—and would to God it was still our national anthem—"A Nation Once Again."

It may be that our memories of such events as these are somewhat distorted, or coloured by the emotion of the time, but I still think that the acting of that little company far surpassed any acting which I have since witnessed. There were, of course, in the company many who were simply "impressed" into acting, because there were no others to be obtained—many who would scarcely be tolerated on the boards of a village "fit-up" company—but enthusiasm made up for all defects, and we had with us such outstanding players as Dudley Digges, F. J. Kelly, Maire Ni Shiublaigh, whose performance in the minor rôle of Delia Cahill was well-nigh perfect, and gave adequate promise of the heights to which she was later on to rise as Moll, in "The Shuiler's Child," and Norah Burke, in "The Shadow of the Glen," and many more triumphs.

On that same evening I was first introduced to the Fay brothers and to the other members of the little company, and when they repeated their performance, in the Ancient Concert Rooms, I, too, was "impressed" into the caste, and, after a gruelling course of "voice-production," etc., at the hands of Frank Fay, made my bow as an actor in the part of Ainle in AE's "Deirdre." The part of Aiden brother of Ainle, was on this occasion played by Fred Ryan, who, some years later, contributed a fine book of essays, "Courage and Criticism," to my first series of "Tower Press Booklets," and afterwards went to Egypt, where he did good work in the Egyptian national movement before he died. Most of our rehearsal work was done, at this time, in the house of the Walkers, in High street, but in 1903 we managed to secure a little hall behind a grocer's shop in Camden street, and here we set to work seriously on the preparation of plays by Colum and Synge and others. All the "set pieces," scenery, and even the forms on which the audience were to sit, had to be made by ourselves, and very often the actors at the far end had to raise their voices to drown the noise of hammer and saw; but it was all glorious enjoyment, and we were, I think, convinced that our enthusiasm was, indeed, "making history."

In addition to the members of the company, who never failed to turn up on rehearsal nights, and generally, after a full day's work at their respective "jobs," we had other visitors. John B. Yeats would sometimes turn up after his day in the studio, and Synge, who was then living in Rathmines, and George Moore, too, came there to read out French verse or prose as he thought it should be spoken, for Frank Fay was almost fanatical in his worship of the French stage.

Yeats, of course, was a frequent visitor, and so was Lady Gregory, although as a rule Lady Gregory preferred the comfort of the Nassau Hotel, where she first read for us Synge's Shadow of the Glen—I can still remember her peculiar pronunciation in such phrases as "Lady of de house." She was a most hospitable hostess, and many a time she refreshed the thirsty company with glasses of claret cup—even, on special occasions, champagne.

Further Afield

Sometimes, on summer evenings, Fay used to bring his company out to the hills above Dublin, and there we used to "try out" our speeches across the little stream that runs by the foot of Kilmashoge. At that time the only way of getting to our chosen place on the hill-side was by train to Dundrum, and from that on foot to Kilmashoge. One such evening I remember very clearly, for as we players of "minor" parts were toiling up the steep hill-side, we were overtaken and passed by a vis-à-vis, in which were seated Dudley Digges, Maire Quinn (afterwards Mrs. Dudley Digges), and one or two others of our "star" actors and actresses, and I can still hear our ribald rejoinders as they waved to us magnificently from their carriaged ease. But we were in truth a very democratic company. All had their particular work to do, and all did it consistently and enthusiastically. No theatrical company was ever freer, I think, from those jealousies and bickerings which mar so many projects—especially of the histrionic sort. This I am inclined to attribute to two facts. First, that no member of the company was paid. Secondly, that every member of the company had a vote in its conduct and proceedings.

On two occasions we forsook the city and wandered further afield—inaugurated, in fact, the idea of a touring company, an idea which was later to prove so successful with the Abbey players. On the first occasion we gave an open-air performance of AE's "Deirdre" in the grounds of the beautiful old house, Dun Emer, near Dundrum—a house which is now famous as the original home of the Dun Emer Press, and is still the headquarters of the Dun Emer Guild, which is still producing the rugs and carpets which are known all over the world. Another performance of "Deirdre," and with it Yeats's "Pot of Broth," was given at the Town Hall in Loughrea. This last was a glorious expedition, and I can still remember the magnificent "spread" which was prepared for us by the hospitable parish priest and his curates. As we sat there eating and drinking of the best, we heard the ringing of a bell in the street, and looking out through the window we saw the town-crier walking solemnly, with bell in hand, and shouting in a voice well-trained for the purpose the announcement that the players from Dublin were that night performing in Loughrea Town Hall. On the following morning our generous hosts had, we found, provided for us a pair of vis-à-vis, in which we drove in state around that "Grey Lake" which has been immortalised by Seumas O'Kelly in his novel, "The Lady of Deerpark."

PROSPECT FROM AN ANTRIM SHORE

By ROY McFADDEN

STRAIGHT from this wide Atlantic shore
The sea moves skyward to America,
Leaving rock and sand and four
Islands breaking the fists of the winter storms.

Round the sea's elbow Donegal
Is masked with rain, throwing one long arm
Out to the intellectual
Brow of the White Rocks on the eastern strand.

This is a place where the mind is bare
As the meagre rocks or the lean, swift stride of sand,
Whose symbol is the bitter air
And a falling gull lost in a heaving sky.

Unknown Russia

Soviet Asia. By R. A. Davies and A. J. Steiger. Gollancz. 7/6 net.
I Am a Woman from Soviet Russia. By Barbara Moore-Pataleowa. Gollancz. 10/6 net.

FOR most English-speaking readers "Russia" means European Russia, and "Siberia" is merely a huge wilderness, striped with tundra and desert, and useful only as a dumping-ground for political oppositions. The war and the shifting eastward of many Soviet industries have done something to dispel this impression, and Messrs. Davies and Steiger, two American journalists, aim to dispel it altogether. The greater part of their book is a geography, based partly on Russian official papers and yearbooks and partly on their own observation, of Russian Asia, and the picture that emerges is of a land which is going through a process of development similar to that of nineteenth century America, although under very different guidance, and at a twentieth century pace. By their account, to take only a few points not mentioned in the school geographies, the Urals and Western Siberia, including Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan, have resources at least equal to those of European Russia, and are not far behind that area in industrial development; the Soviet Far East, suffering only from lack of inhabitants, has almost untapped industrial resources; modern towns can be built in the Arctic, and steamers can travel through the Arctic Ocean, from Murmansk to Vladivostok, on coal mined within the Arctic circle.

In addition to the full and well-documented geographical description there is a rather sketchy historical survey of events in Siberia from the seventeenth century to the present day. The attitude of the authors is frankly critical up to 1917, and frankly uncritical thereafter. "Soviet Asia" is worth reading not as a political or historical guide, but as an up-to-date geography.

Mrs. Moore-Pataleewa, the woman from Soviet Russia, is a champion motor-cyclist. She has ridden from Moscow to Tiflis through thick mud with remarkably few stops, and she shows the same dogged quality in her prose. She jolts along through the usual phenomena—made familiar in the numerous Russian autobiographies written in haste for an expanding market—railway stations, the "Ogpu," exclamation marks, childhood in Tsarist Russia, passports, famine, etc. The only new object is the motor-cycle, and the only new quality in the writing is a certain girlish enthusiasm.

New Fiction

None but the Lonely Heart. By Richard Llewellyn. Michael Joseph 10/6 net.

MODERN industrial England has produced few serious novelists of merit whose work is not pervaded by an atmosphere of quiet gloom. Virginia Woolf, E. M. Forster, Graham Greene—to name only a few—seem to find the society in which they live a futile and depressing one. They do not protest at the stupidity and corruption of their fellow-men; they merely describe that stupidity and corruption with sadness, with resignation, and often with great artistry.

"None but the Lonely Heart," a new novel by the author of "How Green was my Valley," cannot be placed in the same category with the novels of the authors mentioned above, but it is an interesting example of the prevailing trend in English literature. Mr. Llewelyn has taken as his subject the life of a working man, and has told his story as he believes the working man would tell it. We begin with his day-dreams as he lies in bed in the morning—dreams which reflect the sordid hopelessness of the man's life and of his mind. They are dimly ambitious and meanly erotic. The novel continues along these lines, with the hero proceeding to his job, where he is sacked, and then tells of a den of criminals in whose sordid activities he becomes involved. The story, told in the words of its narrow, puzzled hero, never rises above dreariness. A typical passage runs:

You could hardly rush about getting off with brides when you knew your dial was like a pepper-pot, and it never give you no heart to try and make the best of yourself neither . . .

Mr. Llewellyn has made an earnest attempt to enter into the life of a British working man, but in doing so he has shown little selective power. Often he will pursue for pages the reflections of his hero, which, though they may be authentic, are commonplace and platitudinous. The anthropological game is not worth the artistic candle.

All in Our Day. By Manuel Komroff. Chapman and Hall. 8/6 net.

Mr. Manuel Komroff has divided his collection of eighteen short stories into three sections: tales of war, tales of peace, and strange tales. The first section contains little that rises above the level of emotional propaganda; the last section comprises three stories which go only half of the way towards weirdness, and leave the reader with his blood running tepid, but not cold. Among the tales of peace, however, are several which show that, given the proper milieu, Mr. Komroff can produce a short story well above the average. "The Thousand-Dollar Bill" and "The Flaxen-Haired Mannequin" are both good of their kind, while "The Lady and the Titanic" is an excellent piece of humorous writing. It is to be hoped that Mr. Komroff will not in future devote his talents to the horrors either of war or of the macabre. Those stories show considerable promise which draw their inspiration from the more common-place environment of the American bourgeoisie.

Sun Over the Palms. By Pascheal Carlos Magno. Constable. 10/- net.

This is the first novel in English by a member of the staff at the Brazilian Embassy in London. The dust-cover informs us that the author is renowned in his own country as a poet, which is easy to believe, for he has a vividness and beauty of imagery which lend colour to his descriptions of even the drabbest and most sordid backgrounds. He describes, in considerable detail, the household of Sen Chico, a tailor, who lives in Paulos Mattos, the slum quarter of one of Brazil's greatest industrial cities. The period the author has chosen covers the latter years of the last Great War, but this is, in no sense of the phrase, a war novel. It is placid, at times poetical, at times obscene; at all times colourfully written and told with sincerity.

Holy Communion

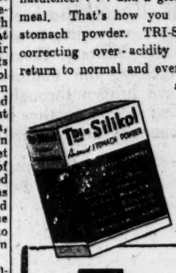

Till He Come: Notes on the Holy Communion Service. By W. W. Ll. Rooke. A.P.C.K., Dublin. 4d. net.

THIS practical manual for communicants was produced for the Dublin Diocesan Youth Conference, which is just drawing to its close. It contains much useful teaching about the social nature of the Liturgy, and emphasises clearly the structure and purpose of the Communion Service. The keynote of the author's commentary is struck in the word offering. God offers, and the worshippers make their offering in Communion.

WHEN EVERY ITEM AGREES WITH YOU

Able to go through the menu without thinking of the consequences; stomach digesting smoothly every morsel you eat. . . . no twinges, no flatulence. . . . and a glorious buoyant energy after even the heaviest meal. BECAUSE they believe that deep in every Englishman's mind there is a devotion to the country and an appreciation of the past—because with these qualities often go a love and understanding of architecture only waiting to be kindled—Batsfords (whose history covers a hundred years) first produced their famous popular series on our towns, villages, cathedrals, parish churches, topography and folk-lore—illustrative of the heritage we are fighting to defend, and of the achievements and potentialities that make it worth defending.

NEW NOVELS
READY NEXT WEEK

THE GREATEST OF THESE
by Francis MacManus.

A priest and a boy part, not to meet again for many years. The renewal of their friendship, when life has raised one of them to be a Bishop and brought the other to tragic exile, is the climax of a memorable tale of human pride and human kindness. For sympathetic insight, vivid portrayal of clerical character, and general narrative power shown in the telling of an extraordinary story, this is probably the best novel Francis MacManus has written. 7/6 net.

FRIDAY'S WELL
by Temple Lane.

A charming adventurer presents himself in the guise of an American airman forced down off the south Irish coast, and the tale that follows, involving three women, is one of brisk incident and well-conceived situations. 7/6 net.

A DUBLIN DETECTIVE STORY
MURDER AND MUSIC
by Gerald Lee.

The story reveals a fidelity to police procedure that hints at inside knowledge. It is a full length Irish detective novel, introducing the irascible yet kindly Detective-Inspector Crowley, known to his companions as "The Crow." 7/6 net.

"Bad News for Japan"

In regard to the conduct of the Far Eastern war, President Roosevelt has made one statement of high importance, and another which must impress every reader as, to say the least of it, unusual. A conference has just concluded at Chunking. The high officials present were Marshal Chiang Kai-shek, speaking for China; Lord Louis Mountbatten, on behalf of the specialised Allied Command in the South-Western Pacific area; and three United States representatives, Generals Stillwell, Chennault and Somervell. According to President Roosevelt, this conference has reached complete agreement "on the method of handling the continental campaign in the Far East." It is, he continues, "bad news for Japan." The President's phraseology implies that a new campaign will be initiated in the near future—a campaign that will be separate from, or, rather, supplementary to, those attacks upon the Japanese-occupied islands which at present absorb the whole of the Allies' offensive energy. It is not for us to speculate upon the form that this "continental campaign" will take. Already two unsuccessful expeditions have been made against Burma; do the Allies contemplate a third, which will profit from the mistakes of its predecessors, and will be undertaken with a sufficiency of men and materials? Is the possibility, again, that munitions—with or without men—will be hurled into China, as ingredients for an intensifying of Marshal Chiang Kai-shek's gallant, but ill-provided resistance to the Japanese? The answer will be known in good time. Equally interesting is President Roosevelt's comment upon the recent landing upon the island of Bougainville, in the Solomon group. He describes the operation as "extremely successful," but, according to our report, criticises it as part of "the stepping-stone method that he is generally against." It is, surely, most remarkable that a national President—who, in this case, happens also to be Commander-in-Chief of his nation's armed forces—should express dissatisfaction with a policy that has been followed by his own and allied generals for more than a year. The whole Allied strategy in the south-west Pacific has been based, ever since the Japanese advance came to a halt, upon this "stepping-stone method." As our Military Correspondent recorded a few days ago, the Americans are feeling their way, a few miles at a time, towards the Japanese outpost of Rabaul, on the island of New Britain. They have taken certain islands in the Solomons, and have landed on others; mile by mile they have fought their way across the "tail" of New Guinea, bringing the two claws of their "pincers" slowly but steadily nearly to the Japanese stronghold. The fact that President Roosevelt — unless, indeed, his phrase has been summarised into dangerous brevity—declares his dissatisfaction with this cautious policy may imply that, simultaneously with a "continental" campaign, he contemplates a major assault upon the islands in Japanese possession. If the supposition is correct, the President must have very clear ideas concerning his country's power and resources. The Japanese have had little fighting to do for the past year. Their naval losses have been considerable, but the wastage of men and material in the Pacific theatre of war has been trivial, on either side, in comparison with that entailed in the terrible struggles on the European fronts. A real offensive against Japan—in what we assume to be President Roosevelt's sense—will need to be a campaign, or a series of campaigns, on a tremendous scale.

Planning in England

The British Minister of Town and Country Planning has issued two memoranda for the guidance of planning authorities. Some of its recommendations—as summarised by The Times—ought to have interest for this country. In the first place, the Minister recommends local authorities to group themselves for the purpose of planning. In the second place, he calls for a survey of the different areas at the earliest possible moment, and, after the survey, for "outline plans." If we read the memoranda correctly, it is not urged that these outline plans shall be anything more than is implicit in the name. Detailed schemes may wait for the time being; in the meanwhile, it is desirable that every planning authority shall have a rough idea of the lines along which it desires its area to develop. It must consider its outline plan under five main headings—communications, residential areas, shopping and business, industry and open spaces. We may remark in parentheses, that any authority which has gone, or will have gone, to the extent of a plan based upon these five essentials will have gone a long way, indeed. In the third place, the Minister recommends that the appearance of buildings shall be kept under control, both in town and in country. Their design ought to be "simple and appropriate" in itself, and must be considered in relation to their surroundings. All these recommendations may sound so simple as to be almost banal; but their interest to us lies in the indication which they afford that England is little, if anything, ahead of Ireland in respect of town and country planning. There, as here, many planning authorities have declined, or neglected, to make use of their statutory powers; there, as here, the tendency is for the various authorities to confine themselves within their own bailiwicks, rather than to take counsel with their neighbours and plan on a "regional," rather than on a circumscribed, scale. It becomes clear that more vigorous methods are necessary both in Ireland and in Great Britain. Both countries anticipate a renascence of building activity after the war; thinking men in both countries fear that such activity, if uncontrolled, will lead to all manner of trouble. Great Britain, in the popular phrase, is "getting a move on." She wishes to have plans—if only "outline" plans—ready for the moment when it will be possible to translate them into terms of bricks and mortar and concrete and whatever other materials may be available, in order that costly mistakes may be avoided, and that there may be no repetition of the building chaos which followed the conclusion of peace in 1918. Ireland would do well to imitate her neighbour's energy. Building is not possible at present, but, if it is to be undertaken at the earliest moment, the bases for it ought to be laid without further delay. It is easier to correct errors in a plan than to pull down whole rows of ill-situated houses, or to divert unwisely laid roads.

Women's Rights

The days of the suffragettes are recalled by the incident at the recent opening meeting of the College Historical Society, when several women students, who had received invitations to the meeting, were refused admission. Naturally, the women concerned are annoyed, and feel that the official apology which they are to receive in no way compensates for their treatment; and it must be conceded that, with a little forethought, the officers of the Society could have avoided marring their otherwise excellent meeting by such discourtesy. In many of the societies of Trinity College women now hold important offices; and it would have been easy to include a note, in any invitation to the officers of such societies, pointing out that the rules of the College Historical Society and of the College forbade women to attend. On the other hand, it is difficult to see how, when the initial mistake had been made, the contretemps could have been avoided. Both the major societies of Trinity College, the College Historical Society and the University Philosophical Society, exclude women from their membership; and an Auditor or President who overrode the rules on his own authority would be liable to impeachment, and perhaps would be forced to resign his office. Further, since no special permission had been secured from the College authorities to admit women to the meeting—normally they are excluded from the grounds after 6.0 p.m.—the Auditor would have contravened the College rules if he had given permission for them to attend. It is difficult to believe, of course, that the women were unaware of the traditions and rules of the Society; but—perhaps rightly—they have taken the opportunity of drawing attention to their position in the College. The two major societies are among the few exclusively male fortresses left in Trinity. Another, the luncheon buffet in the Dining Hall, was the scene of a demonstration some years ago, when three hardy women ventured in, and were summarily ejected. Now the opportunity has arisen of a Blitzkrieg on the College Historical Society, the oldest, and probably the most conservative, society in the College. The feminists have taken it. Whether they succeed in winning this battle for equality depends in part upon the degree of support that the pioneers receive from their own sex. If they do succeed, a mighty tradition will have gone; but their obviously abundant energy may prove in the end to be a valuable and vital influence. At least, the College Biological Society and other mixed societies have lost nothing by surrendering their masculine exclusiveness

"AN ARTIST UNDER THE SEA"

Wearing only a pair of bathing trunks and a diving helmet, and using a sheet of xylonite and a special type of lead pencil, Robert Gibbings produced a series of illustrations of the kind of life he found on the sea floor beneath the coral reefs of the Bermudas and under the Red Sea.

In a lecture, "An Artist Under the Sea," which he delivered before the Royal Dublin Society, Ballsbridge, yesterday, Mr. Gibbings told of his adventures sketching the various forms of under-sea life.

Mr. Gibbings, who was born in Cork, has kindly offered to repeat the lecture on November 24th, at 7.30 p.m., at 6 Eustace street, Dublin, in aid of the Free Feeding Scheme at Bewley's Café, in connection with the Marrowbone Lane Samaritan Fund.

CRUISKEEN LAWN

By Myles na gCopaleen

ONE is occasionally affrighted by a new vision of what is familiar. Take this somewhat hackneyed activity known as death. One reads that so-and-so has died. Now what can be more cynical than making "die" an active verb? In the entire gamut of human "activity" (—and heavens knows it is a pathetic and shoddy catalogue)—quite what can be more passive than the reluctant exit, who can be less "active" than the lead in this one-man show?

Another phrase that can mean something other is "bowing and scraping." It connotes flunkeys and obsequiously-touched fore-locks. I ambition, however, to work the phrase into the notice of the recital of some "violinist."

Two New Projects

Talking of violinists, I am arranging with the radio people for an entirely new type of Sunday concert. We simply cannot compete with combinations like the London Philharmonic and my belief is that we should not try but should concentrate on something native, something destructive—in a word, something Irish. What I want to see is an orchestra composed of people who are used to harping on one string, nervous men who fiddle with their ties, irritable characters who drum on the table, the type of piper who is paid by hardened tune-callers, persons who blow their own trumpets, people who like horning into what is not their business. Probably it will be possible to get a few hoboes, too, and they can be induced to perform by promising them a bottle of Bass soon.

(That sort of stuff is not meant to amuse you, of course. Just ordinary folk).

Here is my second idea. Something quite new in the way of plays. My theory is that any play is bound to become tedious if it contains "human" characters. We see far too much of these tiresome bipeds and listening to them "talking" (whether as "themselves" or some less absurd character devised by a playwright) is becoming an annoyance in this unamusing world. What I want to see is a theatre stage upon which is erected a shallow tank filled with muck and water. Enter Sir Séamus O'Shaughraun, attired in the loud sporty tweeds of his class. Enter a poacher. Enter a game-keeper. Next thing you hear is some pizzicato work on the violins, a clue that you have accidentally walked into a "ballet" orgy. The parties on the stage then embark on vast leppings and prancings, splashing about in the wet and churning up the muck. This goes on for hours until the needs of art have been satisfied.

Next day, the "play" will inevitably be described as a "flop." It is then and only then that we reveal that the "players" were sea-lions and seals and we urbanely inquire of the critics what these beasts are expected to achieve? What but a resounding watery flop?

(I mean).

Extract

"The revival of Mise Eire was signalised by a slight change in the choreography, by two or three main changes in the cast and by the astonishment and delight of those members of the audience who were seeing the work for the first time ('Why hadn't they been told about this sort of thing?' The answer is, of course, 'Why not read THE STANDARD?')

—The Standard.

POST-WAR RELIEF FOR EUROPE

Recently returned from America, where he has been seeing people interested in post-war relief for Europe, the Rev. Dr. A. C. Craig, Secretary of the British Council of Churches, and a former chaplain of Glasgow University, is at present visiting Dublin. He said that he was delighted to find that there were a great many people in Ireland interested in the question of post-war relief and rehabilitation.

As the war went on it seemed more and more likely that it would be followed by a period of dire hardship in many countries, in which there would be an acute scarcity of food and clothing.

There were two bodies in Great Britain with whom he was in touch—the Council of British Societies for Relief Abroad and the Committee for the Reconstruction of Christian Institutions—which were anxious to prepare for helping in the difficulties that would arise after the war. So far they had not been able to obtain from official sources any detailed idea of what assistance they would be allowed to give, but he had been told by an official in Washington that it was quite certain that the help of the voluntary societies would be called upon.

DUBLIN GAS COMPANY PLAYERS

George Shiels' "The New Gossoon," one of the best known plays in the Abbey Theatre repertoire, was ably produced last night by the Dublin Gas Company Players in the Company's Theatre, D'Olier street. The proceeds are in aid of the Marrowbone Lane Samaritan Fund, and repeat performances will be given to-night and to-morrow.

The producer was Humphrey Langan, and among the principal players were:—Kathleen Craughwell, Alphonsus Lyons, Walter Shortall, Dermod O'Kelly and Frances O'Reilly. A trio, composed of Mr. James Kelly, Miss Valerie Koblitz and Miss Nancy Sinclair, provided musical interludes.

GAMBIA MISSIONARY SERVICE

The Archbishop of Dublin, speaking on missions at the Gambia Missionary Service at St. Bartholomew's Church, Dublin, last night, said that they must be filled with admiration at the miraculous way in which the pioneer missionaries had overcome gigantic difficulties. We to-day were building on the results of the pioneer work, to which the missionaries literally had given their lives. "To-day, in every land, there is established an indigenous, if often small, church; these churches have a life in these lands far in excess of their membership," he said.

LONDON LETTER

59 FLEET STREET, LONDON,
FRIDAY NIGHT.

EXPERTS will be disappointed if the jewellery of the late Mrs. Harry McCalmont—the former Winifred de Bathe—fetches less than £40,000 when it is sold at Christie's on next Wednesday week. Mrs. McCalmont, widow of Colonel Harry McCalmont, M.P., died last April. The lots coming under the hammer range from magnificent necklaces of one hundred and eighteen graduated pearls down to a keyless repeating stop-watch, with a dial showing calendar and phases of the moon, in a gold hunter case.

1,600 Guineas for Calf

A new record-breaking figure for a six months old Ayrshire bull calf was set up at yesterday's annual draft sale of Ayrshires from the well-known herd owned by Mr. Adam W. Montgomerie, of Ochiltree, Ayrshire, when 1,600 guineas was paid for the May calf, Stand Guard. One thousand Ayrshire breeders attended and purchased 32 bulls at an average of £417, and 32 heifers at an average of £327. Before the sale, Mr. Montgomerie and his wife were presented with their portraits in oils. Their work for the breed since 1921, said Mr. Alex Kirkpatrick, President of the Ayrshire Cattle Society, had enabled Ayrshire breeders to-day to reap a bounteous harvest.

The Language Policy

"The only vocal antagonism to the policy of making the country bilingual comes from the Irish Times. No political party could survive that did not pay at least lip-service to the cause of Irish," declares Mr. "Kevin Ozzard," in his concluding article on the Irish situation in The Tablet to-day. "Of all the countries in the world Ireland is unique in the proportion of her sons and daughters living abroad," he comments. Every "exile" who returns tends to become the microcosm of a foreign culture, and that culture by no means always the best judged by the standards of the country from which it came. The insistence upon Irish is an attempt to prevent Eire being submerged by the universal shoddiness of the films and the popular press. How far it will succeed is impossible to forecast. There is a vast amount of latent Irish among the people, lying like coal beneath the surface. "Of the efficient, devoted, incorruptible and even over-worked" Civil Service, "still very much a bureaucracy," Mr. "Ozzard" believes that many Irish people fear a position analogous to that of old China. "The best brains are drawn into the Civil Service and the tumour of excessive centralisation grows while the extremities of the country decay."

Too Old at Fifty

The statement of a Chief Constable at a recent meeting of the Holland Standing Joint Committee concerning the retiring age of police constables, that members of his force are apt to crack up before they reach fifty, has drawn attention to the fact that the lot of the policeman pounding his beat in weather good and bad may not be such a happy one as it is supposed to be. Early retirement on a sound pension, however, is one of the attractions of the job, and thousands of pensioned ex-policemen throughout the country are earning good wages on work of a similar nature occasioned by the war.

AN IRISHMAN'S DIARY

Robert Gibbings

A short time ago a friend of mine told me that, in Gougane Barra, he met a huge man with beard who turned out to be Robert Gibbings. According to him, Mr. Gibbings was engaged in working on a book on the river Lee. I sincerely hope he is; because he is a Corkman and a grand writer, and a book of his on an Irish river would certainly be something to look forward to.

Ever since "Blue Angels and Whales," I have been a follower of Gibbings. Circumstances prevented me from following him to the R.D.S. yesterday to hear his lecture, but I have tracked him down the Thames and the Wye with a pleasure that I get out of few new books nowadays.

His fine engravings, of course, give a great part of the charm to his books; but there is a glorious free, racy tang about his writing, and an attractiveness about his insatiable curiosity, that make him outstanding among travel — or ramble—book writers. A work of his on an Irish river would be worth waiting for.

Suburban Alarm

When the baker calls with the day's bread in Sandymount, when women gossip in "the village," when men gather in one of the local hostelries, the talk this week is more often than not about the bag-snatchings and evening attacks which have created a great deal of alarm in the district.

Husbands have been impressing upon wives that they should take only the money necessary for the journey involved when they go forth after dark. Brains are worked on the problem of whether "Towser" should be brought along for company and protection, or left at home to bark in case the bag-snatchers should turn to robbery.

There is a great deal of compact suburbanity about Sandymount, and, while village small-talk is present virtually throughout the year, a subject like the present week's alarm become almost as great in importance, conversationally, as the war.

Restoration

With no flourish of trumpets, the lights appear to be coming back to at least some Dublin suburbs. Cycling home about 3.0 a.m. on a few nights recently, I found almost the full street lighting operating along my route, and I am told that the same holds good in most South-side areas.

Perhaps the bag-snatching epidemic has something to do with it, or it may be that the E.S.B. has decided that the Shannon will fulfil all its obligations, and is passing on the benefit in this way. At any rate, it gives a pleasant non-emergency flavour to the roads at night.

From a recent answer in the Dail I understand also that there is some possibility of our seeing name-boards again on the stations within a reasonable time; but the Minister refuses categorically to restore the signposts on the roads. And yet I could tell him of one or two that he missed in the big "purge," and that are still doing their duty at certain obscure corners.

"Tom" Stodart

A colleague adds the following to my note in yesterday morning's issue:—"Tom" Stodart's death ends a lifetime of interest in newspapers. "Tom" entered journalism when he was eight-and-a-half. His father owned a small Scots paper, the Kircudbrightshire Advertiser, and it was part of the boy's "homework" to assist with this publication. When he was nine, he was contributing a full-page of snippets, under the heading of Multum in Parvo, to the paper each week.

When he was 21 he bought a dying local paper in Yorkshire for £500, and sold it, two years later, for £2,000. Having gained experience of larger newspapers in South Wales and Liverpool he came to the Irish Times on St. Patrick's Day, 1876, and became, after a long and happy career, Financial Editor. Until he retired some years ago, one could set his watch by "Tom's" arrival and departure from the office.

DUBLIN BOXERS WIN DUGGAN SHIELD

AT an inter-city tournament at the Stadium last night Dublin won the Duggan Shield, beating Belfast by five bouts to two.

An extremely good feather-weight bout between B. Coughlan and P. Boylan gave the tournament a rousing send-off. Boylan showed excellent anticipation in the early rounds, and scored well at close quarters, but Coughlan's more accurate punching and good two-fisted counter soon began to give the Belfast man much trouble. Boylan sought to force matters in the last session, and for a short time handed out some heavy punishment, but Coughlan, coming back with an efficient left lead and quick following right, was attacking at the end, and was a worthy winner on points.

W. E. Barnes (Belfast) needed all his ringcraft to keep Pte. F. Brinklow at bay in winning on points. Brinklow attacked practically all the time, and, unleashing a battery of punches, had his opponent in some tight corners. A sturdy boxer, he did not seem at all shaken by the punishment he took, chiefly from Barnes's right hooks at close quarters. Barnes, undoubtedly the more able technician, relied mainly on anticipation and counter to gain his points, and had not these stood him in such good stead he might well have gone under to his tough and game opponent.

Heavy and accurate punching by G. Morahan gained him the verdict over W. H. Hall (Belfast). Hall took a great deal of punishment from Morahan's two-fisted attack, and found it very difficult himself to get past the Irish champion's good defensive left. Game to the end, Hall stood up well against his aggressive opponent, but was well behind on points at the final bell.

Superior accuracy and quickness with the left was the chief medium of P. Byrne's points win against J. King (Belfast) in a rather scrambling light-weight contest. Byrne was the livelier and more aggressive throughout, and was value for his victory.

In a slow cruiser-weight contest, lacking in sparkle and scientific boxing, H. W. Kelly beat M. Sadlier. Again, as in their first meeting, the verdict was rather surprising. Sadlier seemed slightly superior over the first four rounds, and, though he took some heavy body body blows in the fifth, he appeared to have done sufficient to gain the decision.

The heavy-weight bout ended after twenty seconds of the first round with the disqualification of H. O'Hagan for hitting Colman low with a right-hand punch. Results:—

Fly—W. E. Barnes (Belfast) beat Pte. F. Brinklow (Dublin) on points.
Bantam—G. Morahan (Dublin) beat W. H. Hall (Belfast) on points.
Feather—B. Coughlan (Dublin) beat P. Boylan (Belfast) on points.
Light—P. Byrne (Dublin) beat J. King (Belfast) on points.
Welter—M. McKeown (St. Vincent's) beat Pte. F. Branigan (Army) on points.
Middle—Pte J. Duggan (Dublin) beat W. Duncan (Belfast) on points.
Cruiser—H. W. Kelly (Belfast) beat M. Sadlier (Dublin) on points.
Heavy—G. Colman (Dublin) beat H. O'Hagan (Belfast), disqualified in first round.

WEEK-END RUGBY

ALTHOUGH, for various reasons, some of the original selections are unable to turn out, Leinster are favourites for to-morrow's interprovincial match at Galway—the first of the series.

They have a useful pack, and behind the scrum they have a speedy back line, with Con. Murphy, the best full-back in the country, in the last line of defence.

Although Leinster enjoy apparent superiority every year, Connaught's tactics have a most disconcerting effect on even the strongest team, and it may be that to-morrow the Western side will break their long line of ill-luck.

For the second week in succession Lansdowne will be entertaining a Northern Ireland team. This week they are at home to Collegians, and even without the services of their captain (N. Burke), M. O'Flanagan and D. Hingerty, they are likely to record another win.

With several of their keymen unable to turn out, it seems unlikely that Old Belvedere will strike winning form against Clontarf, while Dublin University are unlikely to be troubled by Palmerston.

Even without their regular half-backs, Wanderers should account for U.C.D. at Belfield, and St. Marys should not be hard put to it to dispose of Curragh Command.

Blackrock will be at home to Old Wesley, and the Donnybrook side are fancied to score their second success of the season, while the improved Monkstown side should beat Bective Rangers.

LEAGUE FINAL AT CROKE PARK

BY PAT'O.

St. Mary's (Saggart) have been knocking at the door of League and Championship; their time may come to-morrow, for the manner of their victory over U.C.D. last Sunday stamps them as a more than useful side. The Fitzgerald brothers, O'Reilly, O'Connor, Walsh and Bermingham are all playing well.

Sean McDermott's have a wealth of inter-county men, and will be close to full strength should Joe O'Connor turn out. County finals at Cork, Galway, Dundalk and Loughrea make a big provincial programme.

DUHALLOW HOUNDS

Good sport marked the opening meet at Buttevant on Wednesday last. There were up to fifty mounted when hounds moved off to the first draw at Knockbarry. Hounds found immediately, and went away up the hill towards Ballybeg, but, swinging right over the railway and road and through Dunlea's, ran into Boherascrub. Reynard went away again, but only took a small circle and back to Boherascrub. Breaking again, we went over the road and pointed for Templemary, but after about two miles came back again to Boherascrub. Here hounds must have changed foxes, as this fox ran straight to the fort near Grange Cross, then right over the Liscarroll road at Knockane, on by Nugent's of Copstown, and by Ballykit into Mount North. Going straight through here, the line was over the road at the Steeple Hill and to Rathnee which our pilot barely touched, and on by Gortnagross and Clover Hill. Hounds were run out of scent at Lynch's, overlooking the Mallow Beet Factory. From Boherascrub it was a six mile point and hounds were hunting continuously for close on three hours from the time we left Knockbarry.

Important Shield Matches

THE week-end matches in the Shield probably will decide the issue. Shelbourne and Shamrock Rovers are on level terms with 6 points; then come Drumcondra with 5, followed by Limerick, Bohemians and Dundalk with 3, the rear being brought up by the holders, Cork United (3) and St. James's Gate (0).

After a very shaky start against Shelbourne, who beat them 3-1, the Rovers pulled themselves together in great style, and, last Sunday at Milltown against Drumcondra, they reached heights seldom attained by any Rovers' team. Their football in the first half of that game was magnificent, and a few more similar displays should give them their eighth Shield victory.

To-day Shelbourne play Drumcondra at Ringsend, and, as the Rovers seem to be sitting pretty for another brace at Crumlin to-morrow, much, so far as the Reds are concerned (and Drumcondra also), will depend on the result of that match. It really is the most important of the series. Shelbourne have not lost a match in the competition, but their football so far has not been quite convincing enough, and, to retain their place and to put the Tolka Park team out of the running, they will have to keep the ball more on the ground and put more "snap" into their attack.

Sweeping changes have been made in the Drumcondra defence. Barnes replaces Flynn in goal; O'Rourke's place at right back goes to O'Brien, who will be partnered by Sheil, and the halves are Mulville, McGlynn and O'Mara.

Points for Dundalk in their match with Cork at Oriel Park to-morrow would be extremely useful at this juncture; the same may be said of both Limerick and Bohemians, who meet at Limerick. Hayes, the Cork captain, returns to right back, and McGowan is right half-back, Curtin and D. Noonan completing the line, while Moroney is inside to J O'Reilly on the right wing. Two reserves come into the Bohemian team for Limerick, W. Gibson at left half and Jones on the left wing.

CO. DUBLIN TABLE TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIPS

Only two championship matches in the County Dublin table tennis competition were decided at the C.Y.M.S. Club, Fairview, last night. K. Hill and B. Huet reached the final of the men's doubles, and the holders, M. W. Heron and Mrs. B. Cooper, will again contest the mixed final.

Illness forced J. Hanrahan to scratch from the men's singles.

Senator Thomas Kennedy, President of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union, will preside, and the union's ten members in the Dail and Senate also will be present.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

MR. DE VALERA AND "P.R."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—Study of Mr. de Valera's latest pronouncement on "P.R." leads to a very odd conclusion. He has discovered that the English system of party government, when combined with proportional representation, does not work well in Ireland. His remedy for this—hardly surprising—situation appears to be to scrap, not the English system of party government, but P.R.

It is disconcerting to find An Taoiseach so enamoured of English methods, but the conclusion seems justified. In his recent address to the Solicitors' Apprentices' Debating Society be referred to States which had practised democracy over a long period and were unwilling to accept P.R. What States are these? Mr. de Valera cannot have meant the U.S.A.; for its Constitution and institutions are so fundamentally different from ours that no useful analogy can be drawn from them. He cannot have meant European countries such as Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, the Netherlands or Switzerland—with which we might reasonably compare ourselves, and which have a very much longer experience of democratic government than we have—because all of these have had P.R. for many years, and have shown no desire to abandon it. Apparently the only countries he can have had in mind are Great Britain and the British Dominions that have deliberately copied the British model.

In this and an earlier speech, An Taoiseach criticised P.R. on the ground that it did not ensure stable government or strong government (the two are not necessarily the same, and it is not clear which of the two he desires). But, if one looks for examples of stable governments which have been quite strong enough to meet the wishes and needs of their peoples, so far as they were not prevented from doing so by outside interference, one finds them in the European countries that have P.R. If, on the other hand, one looks for examples of unstable and weak Governments, one finds them in France, which never had P.R.; in Spain, which had a disproportional system specially designed to secure a large majority for the Government party, and in England. The English example is of special interest since it seems to attract Mr. de Valera so strongly. The Baldwin Government could hardly have been described by its best friend as strong. The Neville Chamberlain Government was so weak, despite its huge majority, that it had to be replaced by the Churchill Goovernment, which is a Coalition Government formed in flat defiance of the results of the last general election, as interpreted in accordance with the normal principles of English party government, and which derives whatever strength and stability it has not from the dominance of one party in the House of Commons over all the others, but from the general support of the electorate.

As a simple-minded citizen, I feel that what makes a Government genuinely strong is not the support of a parliamentary majority which misrepresents the electorate, but the general approval by the electors as a whole of a policy that they can understand. It would be easier to understand Mr. de Valera's policy if he would tell us why he considers it essential to retain the English system of government, and if, when he refers to other countries in relation to P.R., he would specify the countries from which he expects us to learn lessons.—Yours, etc.,

EIREANNACH.

GAELIC REVIVAL

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—One of the fundamental objects of the T.C.D. Gaelic Society is to encourage, by every means possible, the study of Irish and to help in its revival as a spoken language.

The report in your issue of the 2nd instant of a debate held under the auspices of this society gives the arguments advanced on one side and ignores those advanced on the other. This garbled account of our meeting gives the impression that we are of the opinion that "too much attention" has been paid "to Gaelic Revival." Nothing could be farther divorced from the truth.

We stand firmly by the declared objects of this Society.—Yours, etc.,

SOMHAIRLE MAC UISTIN.

SMALLER BREWERIES

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—In connection with the recent stoppage of beer exports from Eire, I wish to issue a protest on behalf of the members of my Association against the constant practice of referring to one large brewery company alone. Several of the smaller Irish breweries have always enjoyed an export trade, and in the cases of some of them this trade represents a very large percentage of their total output. A protracted stoppage of beer exports would, in all probability, be absolutely fatal to the continued activities of these firms.—Yours, etc.,

A. WRIGHT, Secretary,
Irish Brewers' Association.

Dublin Theatres

Abbey—Rutherford Mayne's "Peter" will be revived. Denis O'Dea plays the part of the young engineering student who dreams of romantic adventures in the Excelsior Hotel, while F. J. McCormick will again fill the rôle of Sam Partridge.

Capitol—On the stage the third edition of "The Talk of the Town" features a spectacular musical scene from "Showboat."

Gate—"The Avenger," Christine Longford's adaptation of Le Fanu's ghost story, is being retained.

Royal—A new show, called "Flying High," which is produced on the same scale as "Something in the Air," begins to-morrow.

Queen's—The sixth of the "Happy Landing" series will be presented.

Grants for Housing

Grants for the erection or reconstruction of houses in rural areas by private persons or public utility societies are continued until April 1st, 1945, by the Housing (Amendment) Bill introduced in the Dail this week. The grants are £40 for a reconstructed house and from £45 to £80 for new houses.

Certain utility societies which are providing for the housing of working people in substantially the same manner as local authorities may receive assistance from their local authority by way of loan or a contribution to loan charges, by capital grant or lease of land, or by the execution of building development works.

Quiet Day in London

NO particular impression was left on the London Stock Markets yesterday by either buyers or sellers. In fact, business all round proved to be rather small, and there was no evidence of the attempted rally seen in various sections during the past few days.

British Funds were marked down at the outset, but recovery took place before the close. Many are impressed with possible large repayments of stock in the coming months such as the Egyptian issues, which will go to swell credits available for investment. The recent recovery in Home Railway junior stocks is fairly well maintained. Argentine Railway junior stocks are now on the dull side, with operators anxiously waiting for news of more settled political conditions in the country.

A feature in Industrials was a fresh fall of 1/3 to 51/9 in Marks and Spencer on fears regarding the dividend. Great Universal hardened 1½d. to 21/7½. Breweries were dull, Distillers losing 9d. at 87/9. North British Rayon rose 7½d. to 10/6, following the resumption of dividends with a payment of 7½ p.c. British Celanese, however, were sold. Dorman Long put on 6d. at 28/6. International Nickel, after declining ¼ to 39¾, rallied to 40⅜.

FALL IN KAFFIRS

Kaffirs fell on profit-taking by recent speculators. Lydenburg declined 1/10½ to 50/-, S.A. Towns 6d. to 25/3, Lace Prop. 7½d. to 28/9 and Blyvoor 1/3 to 87/6. Among small-priced issues East Rand Consols lost 1½d. at 16/7½ after 16/6, while Wit Nigel were 1½d down at 8/10½ after 8/6. Klerksdorp fell 3d. to 7/9.

Results coming from brewery companies show larger profits, while in several instances higher dividends are being paid. Hammonds Bradford Brewery, with a total issued capital of £375,000, of which £200,000 is in Ord., is showing profits of £105,016 for the year to September 30th last, against £78,828 in the previous year. Final dividend on the Ord. is 6 p.c., making, with the interim 10 p.c., less tax, for the year. This is the same as paid for 1942, but goes against 8 p.c. paid regularly since, and including, the year to September 30th, 1937. Dividends each year have been amply covered by earnings. There is a market in London for the £1 Ordinary shares around 38/9, to return about £5 3/- p.c., without taking the final dividend into consideration.

Dublin Easier

PUBLIC interest on the Dublin Stock Stock Exchange was on a reduced scale yesterday, and markets closed the week with a quiet appearance. There was some selling of Irish Securities, and this produced an easier tone in most departments. Cross-Channel Industrials advised generally lower.

Agreement Loan and Security Loan both shed fractions; 3½ p.c. War Loan shaded off to 103¼. Corporation issues held steady and Waterford 3½ p.c. gained a point at 100.

There was rather heavy selling of Guinness Units all day, and they fell 1/3 to 120/3, and looked offered at the finish.

Home Rails were again easier inclined on fresh liquidation. Great Northern Pref. lost 15/- at 43 and the Guar. relapsed 1½ points to 60. Great Southern Ord. and Pref. showed no change, but the Guar. was a shade off at 56. More interest was taken in the Deb. and heavy selling put the price back sharply to 84½, but just at the close a small amount of stock changed hands at 85¾.

Pim Bros. Pref. relapsed 3/3 to 44/-, and Goulding Pref., Independent Pref. and Irish Cinema Pref. were all easier. Goodbody Pref. rose to 26/- and Irish Sugar Pref. to 28/6.

Imperial Tobacco Ord. declined to 150/4½ and Imperial Chemical Ord. sagged to 37/10½.

Six Months for Failure to Assign Dollars

NATHAN BRULL, Ranelagh road, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment by District Justice Lennon in Dublin yesterday for continued failure to make returns to the Department of Finance of particulars of holdings in his name in four American companies, and also failing to assign to the Minister 2,275 dollars standing to his credit in the Guarantee Trust Company, New York, contrary to the Emergency Powers Acts.

Mr. L. J. Lysaght (Chief State Solicitor's office), prosecuting, said that in May last Brull had been convicted of similar charges and fined £51. The fines had been paid, but defendant still failed to comply with the Emergency Powers Orders.

Mr. Herman Good, solicitor for defendant, said that Brull always contended that the holdings in question and dollars, though standing in his name, were, in fact, the property of his brother, who was living in New York. When they met in Rotterdam five years ago they had arranged that the defendant would become his brother's nominee. Since May last cables had been sent to New York asking his brother to send on documentary evidence and a sworn affidavit as to the ownership. So far no reply had been received. Defendant did not wish to offend against the laws of this country.

In reply to the District Justice, Mr. Good said that the reason no cable was sent in May last, although he called in October, was that the Minister for Finance claimed to dictate the terms of the cable to be sent.

Bails were fixed to allow of appeal.

Forced Wedding in Limerick

That a man was bundled before a priest and compelled to go through a form of marriage was stated at a Limerick Circuit Court yesterday, when Michael Hennessy, of Ballylanders district, was charged with an offence against a girl.

Mr. G. Lee, for the accused man, said that Hennessy was prepared to marry the girl, but could not do so, as he had gone through a ceremony of marriage with another girl about seven years ago, when the family of that girl bundled him into a car and took him to a Parish Priest's house at Ballylanders, where a ceremony of marriage was performed. Hennessy apparently consenting. He never lived with this woman, and later the Parish Priest told his parents that if Hennessy had not consented and had not lived with the girl he was quite free.

Mr. Lee, in reply to the Judge, said that the marriage could only be annulled by the Ecclesiastical authorities. They were also willing to take proceedings under civil law to have the marriage annulled.

The accused man was allowed out on bail.

Shortage of Fertilisers

The shortage of fertilisers is resulting in a progressive and steady decrease in crop yield per acre, said Sir Basil Goulding, chairman, at the annual meeting of W. and H. M. Goulding, Ltd., held in Dublin yesterday.

Their chief raw materials, he said, (rock phosphate and sulphur pyrites) had to be imported from overseas, and the cost was 20 to 25 times more than it was in 1939. Had it not been for a Government contribution the price of superphosphate would have risen to an extent that the farmer could not afford to buy it.

He was afraid that the shortage of fertilisers might be a contributory factor to plant disease. Supplies for the coming year depended upon shipping space.

Extra Bonus for Rail Workers

On the application of the Irish Transport and General Workers' Union, the Minister for Industry and Commerce has increased the rate of bonus for workers in the Hotels' Department of the Great Southern Railways from 7/- to 10/- per week.

Shop grade mechanics in the Road Transport Section of the railway have been granted increases of bonus from 8/- to 10/- per week, to date from October 5th, and a similar award has been made to labourers' helpers and semi-skilled grades at the Broadstone Depot of the railway.

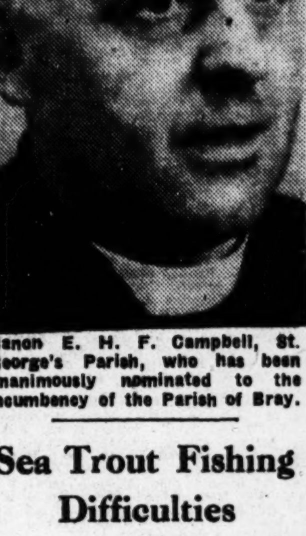

Irish Red Cross Relief for India

The Irish Red Cross Society has decided to send £2,000 for the relief of famine in India, Mr. Justice Conor Maguire, President of the High Court, Chairman of the Central Council, announced last night at an informal dinner given in the Shelbourne Hotel to Miss Yvonne Hentsch, of the International Red Cross Headquarters in Geneva.

The Irish Society is also sending £500 to the League of Red Cross Societies. This is in addition to a sum of £500 already sent this year to the International Red Cross Committee.

Miss Hentsch said that in organising the exchange of letters between belligerent countries her society had been faced with the biggest task it had ever had. It not only arranged the exchange of letters with prisoners of war, but also with civilians, whose families were separated. Up to May 25th last eight million family messages had been sent through the Committee. In arranging communications with prisoners of war, over 3,500 people were engaged, of whom over 2,500 were voluntary workers, many of them nurses, who came in to do two hours' work after their day's work. Up to December, 1942, over 39 million prisoners-of-war letters had passed through the Committee's offices.

She knew that in Ireland there was no need for the society to undertake the training of professional nurses, but she was glad to know, both from its bulletins and from what she had seen in Dublin and Limerick, that the Irish society was giving instruction in home nursing, and that they were fostering the Junior Red Cross. She would be able to report on her return to Geneva that the Irish society was going steadily onwards, and it would make great headway, provided it realised that its work was not merely war-time work. It must be useful in normal times if it was going to serve in time of emergency.

Canon E. H. F. Campbell, St. George's Parish, who has been unanimously nominated to the incumbency of the Parish of Bray.

Sea Trout Fishing Difficulties

The practice, under Irish law, of regarding sea trout as salmon was anomalous, said Dr. J. E. Falvey, at a meeting of the Dublin Trout Anglers' Association, in Jury's Hotel, last night. He added that sea trout were merely brown trout, which had the migratory habit—to class them with salmon was erroneous.

Dr. Falvey was giving a talk on "Sea Trout Fishing," which a large attendance of members heard. He gave details of the cost of the fishing, methods and places to fish, and recounted some of his own experiences. Ireland, he said, provided some of the best of this fishing in this hemisphere.

Mr. E. Keegan said that it was a shame that there was not more care taken of the sea trout lakes of the West. Many of them were weed-grown and there was no attempt at re-stocking; yet, visitors were asked for big sums to fish them. In many cases weed had prevented access to the sea.

Mr. J. Moorkens gave some details of spinning for sea trout.

THE ART OF JACK B. YEATS

It is doubtful whether there is an artist living anywhere to-day who integrates literature, the subject, into terms of visual expression as beautifully as Jack B. Yeats. An exhibition consisting mostly of his recent works opened at the Victor Waddington Gallery, Dublin, yesterday.

It would be hard for the visitor to it to say whether he felt more enchanted by this great artist's inexhaustible powers of invention, more particularly, perhaps, in the matter of colour harmonies, or by the beautiful altitude of mind, the detached, yet wholly sympathetic, approach, to his subject. The man who can—as Jack B. Yeats can—convey the terrifying beauty of a city fire being fought by firemen, as in "Heroes of the Flames," and, on the other hand, the mysterious distinction of a little group of thoughtful people sitting quietly in a room, as in "Evening Light," and whose drawing, colour and composition are equally eloquent of the excitement and the peace, has obviously reached, and can express, an attitude of mind which, whether on analysis it be defined as philosophic or religious, ranks him amongst the great spiritual artists.

There are nineteen pictures in the exhibition, and every one of them to a greater or lesser degree—whether it be a music hall scene, like "Way Hey There She Rises," or a graveyard scene, like "A Loath to Depart," a study of people being transported across the Liffey, as in "Number One Ferry," or a note on a solitary drinker, as in "The Quiet Man"—charms the eye and produces the mood that only master works produce, the mood of catharsis

OTHER EXHIBITIONS

At the Contemporary Picture Galleries an exhibition of oils and water-colours by Ethel G. Battersby was opened by Mr. Richard Hayward on Wednesday. The artist's handling is at times rather lacking in finish, her surfaces tend to be unduly rough, but she has a feeling for spacious composition and a delicate sense of light and atmosphere, qualities which are, perhaps, revealed at their best in "Open Spaces in Connemara." Amongst the water-colours "West Door and East Window, Muckross Abbey," in particular, has fine line and quietly harmonious colour.

The Dublin Sketching Club's 69th exhibition at Mills' Hall includes 170 oils, water-colours and miniatures. The effect of the whole seems for some reason rather tamer than usual—perhaps because we are getting used to the inclusion of a larger percentage of experimental contemporary work in collective exhibitions in Dublin. The President of the Hibernian Academy contributes two landscapes, and other artists whose work attracts attention include Ernest C. Hayes (whose colour effects are increasingly delicate and pleasing), Marshall C. Hutson (a landscape with trees realised with fine assurance), Gerald Donnelly, Charles E. Kelly, Sean Dixon and Mrs. K. O'Brien.

Dublin Coal Fund Appeal

THE plight of Dublin's poor at present is not an enviable one, with soaring prices and unemployment, said Alderman Martin O'Sullivan, T.D., Lord Mayor of Dublin, presiding at the annual public meeting in aid of the Mansion House Coal Fund yesterday. If, added to this, there are empty grates, the position of children and old people especially will be very serious, indeed.

The Lord Mayor said that the Committee expressed their sincere and grateful thanks to the Archbishop of Dublin, Most Rev. Dr. McQuaid, for his interest in the fund and his generous subscription of £100. The President, Dr. Douglas Hyde, had also contributed £50.

They had distributed 425 tons of coal during the year through various charitable institutions in the city. The coming season would strain the resources of every charitable society owing to the ever-increasing distress. During the year their fund had expended almost £100 more than the previous year.

The Treasurer's report showed that during the year under review their expenditure amounted to £1,460, fuel alone accounting for £1,368.

COMMITTEE'S WORK

The Lord Mayor said that the activities of the Committee were only limited by the amount of subscriptions received. He recommended the fund to the charitable public of Dublin, whose generosity was proverbial; and he appealed particularly to those who had let the appeal pass by in former years because of special circumstances, to help the present appeal in every way they could. He had much pleasure in moving the adoption of the report.

Very Rev. Canon Flood, seconding, joined in the appeal, and asked that the subscription list be a very generous one, and that they might have God's blessing on their great work.

Mr. M. A. Corrigan, Hon. Secretary, said that up to date the amount of subscriptions was upwards of £800.

Senator P. T. Kelly proposed that the fund was worthy of support. Special thanks, he said, were due to Mr. Corrigan and the Committee for the splendid work achieved during the year

Mr. Hubert Briscoe, seconding, said they should make an endeavour to tap other sources besides those that had always been so generous.

Juror's Illness Causes Trial Postponement

THE inability of a juror to help his colleagues in considering the evidence, because of illness, resulted in the discharge of a Dublin Circuit Criminal Court jury last night, and postponement of the trial of three young Dublin men, which had lasted for two days.

The hearing of evidence had concluded; both State and defence counsel had addressed the jury; Judge M. J. Connolly had summed up, and the jury had been considering its verdict for an hour, when one of its members had an epileptic fit. After the foreman had told Judge Connolly that the man, although he had partially recovered, still appeared "very dull and hazy," and, in his opinion, was unable to discharge his duties, it was decided to postpone the trial. Judge Connolly ordered that the juror concerned receive all necessary medical treatment. He was later taken home in a taxi.

In the dock were Christopher O'Brien (23), no business, of St. Mary's Mansions, off Sean MacDermott-street; Henry G. Milner (21), general dealer, of Brian avenue, Marino, and Patrick Caffrey (21), no business, of 49a Corporation place. O'Brien had been charged with the larceny, from a garage at 26 Summer Arch, N.C.R., of a Ford car engine, several motor car jacks and wheels, a kit of tools; and also with the larceny of two bicycles in different parts of the city. Milner was charged with receiving the property, and Caffrey with stealing one of the bicycles.

Milner, in evidence, admitted being in possession of the property, but denied that at the time of purchase he was aware that it had been stolen. O'Brien declined to give evidence or make a statement. Caffrey, in evidence, said that the bicycle had been stolen by O'Brien. He had received £1 from O'Brien, being half the sum Milner had paid for it.

Milner was remanded on continuing bail, and O'Brien and Caffrey in custody.

Fewer Hares for Coursing

Irish coursing clubs are finding it hard to carry on because of the poaching and export of hares.

This was pointed out to the Ministers for Justice and Agriculture yesterday at Government Buildings by a deputation from the Irish Coursing Club, who asked for a ban on the export of hares.

The members of the deputation—Messrs. T. Morris, A. Callinan and Bruton—were accompanied by Mr. T. D. Looney, T.D.; Mr. P. J. Ruttledge, T.D., and Mr. James Dillon, T.D. The Ministers were told that for some time past hares were being exported on a large scale, and that poaching was extensive, with the result that coursing clubs, especially the Sunday clubs in the South, were finding it almost impossible to carry on. On several occasions, they stated, meetings had to be abandoned because sufficient hares could not be procured.

A member of the deputation stated later that as a result of their representations they expect that an Order banning export will be made, but the Minister could make no promise that he would make a hares protection Order.

Pleasure Boats on the Liffey

The Dublin County Manager, Mr. D. O'Donovan, has had a favourable response from the first riparian owners he has approached in connection with his scheme for making the Liffey passable for pleasure boats. He expects to begin work shortly at one of the weirs, making a landing-stage and "rollers" of the type used for by-passing weirs on the upper reaches of the Thames. He thinks it quite likely that by next summer it may be possible for pleasure boats to go up the river as far as Lucan.

Dublin Divorce Suit

Mr. Justice Haugh, in the High Court, Dublin, yesterday, fixed alimony at £4 a week to be paid by Francis Colclough, bootmaker, North Strand, Dublin, to his wife, Elizabeth, St. Ita's road, off Botanic avenue, Glasnevin, Dublin, pending the hearing of her petition for divorce on the ground of alleged adultery, which the husband denied.

Mr. J. M. Fitzgerald, S.C., and Mr. Ernest M. Wood (instructed by Messrs. Vincent and Beatty) appeared for Mrs. Colclough; and Mr. Kingsmill Moore, S.C., and Mr. A. D. Pringle (instructed by Mr. Gerald F. Robinson) for her husband.

Dublin. The Venerable Archdeacon Sullivan officiated. The bride was given away by her father, and was attended by a matron of honour, Mrs. D. Gray. Mr. Tony Huggard was best man, and Mr. Torrence Large was groomsman in the church. A reception for relatives was held at the Gresham Hotel.

Jail for Housebreaking.—James Furey (38) was sentenced to 18 months' hard labour by Judge Davitt, in the Dublin Circuit Criminal Court yesterday, for housebreaking and larceny.

Lady Oranmore and Browne's Application

THE High Court, Dublin, consisting of Mr. Justice Gavan Duffy, Mr. Justice Haugh and Mr. Justice Overend, yesterday further adjourned for one week the application in connection with the custody of Gay Kindersley, the thirteen years old son of the Hon. Philip Leyland Kindersley, 11 Rutland Gate, London, and of Lady Oranmore and Browne, Castle MacGarrett, Claremorris, his former wife.

The application was for an order to make absolute a conditional order of habeas corpus directing the mother to deliver the boy to his grandfather, Lord Kindersley, at Plaw Hatch Hall, Sharpthorne, Sussex.

It had been stated that Lord Kindersley sought custody for the purpose of having the boy educated at Eton, in accordance with his father's wishes, and that the mother refused to allow him to go to England because, she said, it would be imperilling his safety to send him to England while the war lasted. When the application was before the Court last July, Mr. Justice Gavan Duffy said that they were of opinion that on the case, as it then stood, it would be unsatisfactory for them to proceed without definite evidence that the father, who was a prisoner of war in Italy, was aware of and approved these proceedings, and wished the boy to go to Eton, notwithstanding the mother's expressed opposition. They, therefore, thought it right to give an opportunity to convey the position to the father and to ascertain his wishes.

Yesterday, Mr. Lavery, S.C., for Lady Oranmore and Browne, told the Court that they wished to put on affidavit facts which, he said, would completely displace a statement in an affidavit of Lord Kindersley to the effect that he was aware that his London solicitors had had the fullest instructions from his son to take every possible step to obtain the return of Gay to England in accordance with an order of the English Court of Appeal.

FATHER'S VISIT

They wished to state that since 1940 the Hon. Philip Kindersley had visited this country; had seen the children (Gay and Tessa), and had assented both orally and in writing to their remaining in this country. In addition, a postcard and an undated letter had been received from him from Italy some time after the proceedings had been before the Court last August, written to Gay, which showed most distinctly that he was aware of his son being in Ireland with his mother, and that he did not dissent from it. They would also like to put on affidavit the circumstances of the boy at St. Columba's College, Rathfarnham, where he had been for a month or six weeks, to show that he was doing well there, and was happy.

"I do not know," said Mr. Lavery, "whether the Warden would like to say whether or not he was educating the boy as a Sinn Feiner—(laughter)—that is a matter for himself."

They would like, continued Mr. Lavery, to exhibit a number of English newspapers—in the main, evening papers — particularly the Evening Standard. Lord Kindersley was reported to have given an interview appearing in those papers. Lord Kindersley was said to have stated that he had won his case in Dublin, subject to appeal. In a letter to his father the Hon. Philip Kindersley stated that he had heard that he had won his case in Dublin, subject to appeal, and Lord Kindersley said that he was of opinion that his son's use of the expression "subject to appeal" was caused by the fact that at the time of writing his son had heard only of the conditional order. The letter did not disclose the Hon. Philip Kindersley's source of knowledge, but he would like to suggest that his source of information was those newspapers.

The Court would have to consider whether they could grant the order, which was an order that the boy be sent out of the country in charge of Lord Kindersley's secretary, or nominee, or whether they could make an order to send him to Eton for education. He submitted that it was necessary that all material at the disposal of either party should be placed before the Court before the matter was argued.

"DISASTROUS" DELAY

Opposing the application for an adjournment, on behalf of the Hon. Philip Kindersley, Mr. J. M. Fitzgerald, S.C., said that the only material matters for the consideration of the Court were whether the father knew of the proceedings taken in this country to recover the custody of his child, and whether he approved them. The only reason that there could be for the application for an adjournment was to acquire a little more delay. Any further delay would be disastrous, because the whole point of the application was to have the boy enter Eton before the beginning of the academic term next January.

The Court, having given the adjournment, Mr. Justice Gavan Duffy said that the affidavits on behalf of Lady Oranmore and Browne would have to be filed and delivered not later than next Wednesday morning.

With Mr. Lavery were Mr. R. McGonigal, S.C., and Mr. E. C. Micks (instructed by Mr. Gerald Maguire); and with Mr. Fitzgerald were Mr. W. H. Carson, S.C., and Mr. E. S. Robinson (instructed by Messrs Hayes and Sons).

Wounding Charge at Bray

At Bray yesterday, Peter Kingston, farmer's son, Killballyowen, Aughrim, Co. Wicklow, was remanded on bail on a charge of wounding Richard Mulhall at Killballyowen on October 24th last with intent to commit murder.

Supt. G. A. Flynn, Wicklow, said that the injured man was not in a position to give evidence, but he was out of danger. He was paralysed.

Law Clerks' Wages Campaign.—The Irish Union of Distributive Workers and Clerks is to approach the Incorporated Law Society, an Irish Times reporter learned yesterday, with a view to stopping the practice of some solicitors advertising for girls to work in their offices for "no salary" in order to give such girls experience. This is another phase of the campaign by law clerks and law typists to secure reasonable wages to meet the growing cost of living.

EXCELLENT RESIDENTIAL FARM AND MARKET GARDENS FOR SALE BY AUCTION, SEAPARK, MALAHIDE, CO. DUBLIN.

We are instructed by the Representatives of the late P. W. Watson to offer by Public Auction,

ON WEDNESDAY, 17th NOVEMBER, 1943,
At Our Salesrooms, 13 Mary's Lane, Dublin, at 3 p.m.
(IF NOT PREVIOUSLY DISPOSED OF), the property known as Seapark Farm, Malahide, containing 61 acres, 3 roods 1 perch, Statute measure, of which 60 acres 1 rood 9 perches is held in fee simple, subject to a revised Land Commission Annuity of £57 10s. 4d., and 1 acre 1 rood 32 perches is held under a Lease for 200 years from 29th September, 1931, subject to a yearly rent of £14 10s. 0d. Poor Law Valuation, £106 5s. 0d. on Lands and £12 0s. 0d. on Buildings.

The Residence is well built, in good repair, containing sittingroom, diningroom, 4 bedrooms, box room, kitchen, large attic, bathroom, with h. and c. water, and w.c. E.S.B. lighting and heating. Malahide town water supply and telephone. There is also an excellent well with automatic electric pump, which supplies the glasshouses and garden.

The Land is of exceptional quality, having been highly cultivated and very heavily manured for a number of years, and is in peak condition at present. It is well known for very early and remunerative crops. Seasonal bearing crops include about 1½ acres asparagus and ½-acre seakale. In the Garden there are strawberries, alpine strawberries, apple and pear trees, rhubarb, etc. Growing crops also include Brussels sprouts, cabbage, sprouting broccoli, onions, Swede turnips and mangolds for seed. There is also about 7 acres of winter wheat already sown.

Special attention is drawn to the two glasshouses and outdoor frames, all heated by very modern methods. The glasshouses contain about 1,000 carnation plants of the highest quality, probably the best collection in this country. They produce blooms the whole year round, and are eagerly sought after, and realise the highest prices on the Dublin market. It took the late owner many years regardless of expense, to build up the present remarkably high standard.

The outoffices include a heated and insulated mushroom house, rhubarb forcing shed, 6 cow hay shed, motor house, water house, 4 box stalls, with loft; root house, workshop, packing house, clay sterilising plant, water tanks, 2 implement sheds, piggery, barn, etc. There is electric light in most of the outoffices and glasshouses.

The property is ideally situated on the Malahide-Portmarnock coast road, and in an excellent position for a building scheme. It is adjacent to the Town of Malahide and convenient to the D.U.T. Co. 'bus terminus and the G.N.R. Station.

Big Sea-Air Battle In Pacific

SILENCE yesterday shrouded the great sea-air battle raging in the South-west Pacific between Allied units and a mighty Japanese force of 53 warships, transports and cargo vessels moving south in five convoys in an attempt to reinforce the bomb-battered garrison at Rabaul.

While results of this battle, which Washington experts believe may develop into the greatest in history, are lacking, news came from General MacArthur's Headquarters yesterday that, attacking at Japanese reinforcements already massed at Rabaul, Liberators and Dauntless dive-bombers hit five heavy cruisers, two light cruisers, two destroyers and one merchantman. One of the heavy cruisers blew up, while 26 intercepting fighters were destroyed, in addition to 24 probables. The cost to the Allies was nine 'planes.

In other blows at Japanese shipping in the Pacific on Saturday MacArthur's 'planes sank a cruiser with three direct hits, and bombed a destroyer in the Bismarck Sea and north of Nassau a 10,500-ton tanker was disabled.

One hundred bombers attacked Rabaul. Admiral Halsey's torpedo and dive-bombers attacked shipping in the harbour, and were swiftly followed by Liberators, which dropped 82 tons of high-explosive bombs on waterfront warehouses, wharves piled high with war materials, and coal and oil dumps, leaving the area blanketed with smoke.

JAPAN'S LOSSES

No word has come from Allied sources about what the Japanese call the "Battle of Bougainville," since a Washington spokesman said early yesterday that various Japanese naval units had been spotted on their way from Truk about 1,000 miles from Rabaul. The biggest fleet the United States has ever assembled was said to be ready to make its first real bid to force the Japanese Fleet out to fight.

Tokyo Radio claimed that more than 56 Allied warships had been sunk and 78 damaged from October 31st to November 5th in the "Battle of Bougainville Island."

Germans Offe[r] Evacuation

Seyss Inquart, Reich Commissioner of Holland, said yesterday at Utrecht, according to Hilversum Radio, that it was "impossible that a Teutonic nation could be bent and held down for ever."

"The Russian soldier of to-day is very different from the soldier of 1914. Bolshevism has made a different man of him; it has put him into a new shape. The vast spaces and steppes of Russia have made her people melancholic and willing to suffer.

"It is clear that here we are facing elements which we cannot overcome with our European methods. There can be no understanding between us, but only the clash of one against the other.

"To-night I can say quite openly that Germany would evacuate the Netherlands, Scandinavia, and many other countries if we knew that these countries would defend themselves against an Allied invasion, or if these countries would do something to prevent the passage of Allied 'planes over their respective territories.

"We do not want a Europe dominated by Germany. If we could free the forces engaged on garrison duties in the European countries, we would send them to the East, because the path of Germany's historical mission lies in the East."—(Reuter.)

Co. Clare dance hall owners decided at Ennis on Saturday to support an appeal against dance hall restrictions imposed by the District Court, which has been entered by Miltown Malbay Hall Committee.
